

Venezuelan Uprising Smashed

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP)—Troops loyal to President Romulo Betancourt smashed a leftist uprising by marines in the coastal city of Carupano Saturday night and captured three rebel leaders, a government source reported.

Hands Off Colonies!

British Colonial Secretary Reginald Maudling sharply warned the United Nations to keep its hands off Britain's colonies yesterday.

Casualty figures were not available but the fighting was said to have been violent. The government source said that by nightfall the loyalist forces were conducting a clean-up campaign in Carupano, which is 300 miles east of here.

The Carupano garrison of 400 marines and 50 military policemen revolted Friday, demanding Betancourt's resignation and calling on other military units to join them.

GARRISON ACCUSED
Betancourt accused the garrison Friday night of plotting to set up a Castro-type Communist regime. He gave them an ultimatum to surrender by dawn.

SNIPING ACTION
Earlier Saturday the loyalist forces were reported advancing into Carupano from three different directions over mined roads.

The rebels fell back, breaking up their headquarters in a mid-city high school, and started a sniping action from rooftops and houses.

LEADER CAPTURED
First reports reaching here told of the capture of Capt. Jesus Molina Villegas when government forces occupied an electric power plant. Molina had been identified by rebel broad-

Who's Behind Bars?

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI)—City zoo director Ivo Poglayen has complained that zoo visitors have fed lighted cigarettes to ostriches, set one ostrich afire, fed rocks to a baby sea lion until it died, blinded a porcupine, poisoned 40 animals and stoned birds in their cages.

Pearson: Jobs Slump Lies Ahead

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP)—Liberal Leader Lester Pearson said here Saturday night that figures prepared for the government indicate an average 495,000 persons will be out of work next year unless action is taken.

About 335,000 unemployed are forecast for 1964 in figures prepared for the commission of inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Fund, he said.

IS HE AWARE?
Mr. Pearson, speaking to an audience of about 400, asked "is Prime Minister Diefenbaker aware of these figures?"

If he is not, the Liberal leader asked, how has he been doing his work? How has he been looking after the interests of the Canadian people?

"If he is aware of them how can he stand up and tell the Canadian people that we've never had it so good and there's nothing to worry about?"

HAD CHANCE
He said Mr. Diefenbaker, who opened his campaign officially Saturday night in London, Ont., probably is asking for re-election so he can produce a century plan for Canada's 100th birthday in 1967.

In 1958 he had asked for a working majority to carry out a national development plan of five to seven years, said the Liberal chief, "but he had his chance."

DEFEATIST?
"How could he say it was defeatist to talk of Canadian problems? How can he claim that this country automatically is on the threshold of a great economic upsurge?"

"They talk about an upsurge and look what they did to the Canadian dollar," he devalued to a pegged 92¢ cents in terms of U.S. currency.

Wealth, Happiness In 'Bright Vision'

By RICHARD JACKSON
Special to the Colonist

LONDON, Ont. — Prime Minister Diefenbaker and "hometown Ontario" have renewed membership in their own mutual admiration society.

The people of this voter-packed southwestern corner of Ontario gave him his biggest and best crowd so far of this campaign . . . 5,000 of them packed to the roof of the London Arena.

And he gave them his bright new vision of the greater Canada to come.

He called it "this finer Canada of your dreams and mine."

And while on paper it might look just a little corny side, the cheering throng found it anything but corn.

Many Components

The new Canada of the Diefenbaker dream had many components. Among them:

- A revised, modern federal tax code, based on a royal commission investigation directed to eliminate taxation anomalies and inequalities;
- Increased government credits for exports;
- A longer line of federal credit for the modernization of industrial plants;
- Stepped-up assistance for industrial and pure research;
- Expanded production and distribution facilities for electric power;
- Larger and more widely dispersed works projects;
- A fuller measure of "social justice";
- Contributory pensions over and above old age assistance.

'Promises Kept'

These and other things, said the prime minister, would make for "more jobs, more wealth, more happiness."

The look was forward.

The drive was to "build, expand, develop."

This was the future. But what of the past.

"I have kept my promises," said the prime minister simply. "I have kept faith with you."

And by its quick cheer, the crowd let him know that "hometown Ontario" agreed he had.

He spoke for 90 minutes. It was too long . . . because it was too hot.

Spring must have been busting out all over from Brant-

Ribicoff Sounds Off

Doctors 'Blackmail' U.S. Medicare Plan

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)—Secretary of Welfare Abraham A. Ribicoff charged a group of New Jersey doctors Saturday night with resorting to "blackmail" to defeat a proposed federal medical care plan for the aged.

More than 200 New Jersey doctors have signed a declaration that they would refuse to treat patients under terms of a bill which would use Social Security funds to meet medical expenses of the aged.

VIOLATING OATH
"In trying to blackmail the Congress and the American people by refusing to treat older people," Ribicoff said at a state convention of Young Democrats here, "They are violating the Hippocratic oath which they took before they began the practice of medicine."

New Jersey Gov. Richard J. Hughes also accused the signers earlier in the day of violating their professional oath. He said he hoped their "threat" would fail.

'NOT STRIKE'
The initiator of the declaration, Dr. Bruce J. Henriksen, director of surgery at Point Pleasant Hospital, reiterated that "This is not a doctors' strike."

"It is merely an effort on our part to stop the socialization of medicine — to protect our patients from government-controlled medicine."

Real Initiative!

Clock was set back 100 years on Douglas Street Saturday when Mrs. Arthur Drew of 2529 Empire, and Frank Phipps, 404 Lampson, strolled leisurely among hurrying shoppers to point up Victoria's centennial year. Said Mrs. Drew: "Nobody seemed to be doing much about the centennial so we thought we'd take the initiative." Her costume is 100 years old. —(Ryan Bros. photo.)

Canadian Proposal Draws French Balk

ATHENS (CP)—Strong French objections to a Canadian proposal held up drafting of the final communiqué of the NATO council meeting Saturday night.

France took exception to a Canadian suggestion that the communiqué come out against testing of nuclear weapons. All NATO members except France supported the Canadian proposal.

France also objected to the new United States proposal for a European voice in the control of American nuclear weapons stationed in Europe.

French objections forced adjournment of the conference to 10 a.m. Sunday and External Affairs Minister Green of Canada likely will have to delay his planned departure time for Canada.

France supported the Canadian proposal that NATO back the efforts of the Geneva disarmament conference. But it balked at the second Canadian proposal that NATO take a stand against nuclear testing.

This is because France wants to test her own atomic bombs.

The French delegation also favored tough wording in the communiqué against Russia, which most delegations, including Canada's, opposed.

Wolves Attack Village

ISTANBUL (Reuters) — A pack of wolves attacked a sheepfold near Buca in western Turkey Saturday night and mauled 14 persons, five of them children, in a 45-minute life-and-death struggle.

One of the children died from his injuries.

A brawny villager, Kemal Gurbuz, 22, said he killed one wolf with his bare hands but lost his left arm in doing so.

Speaking from his hospital bed in Izmir, eight miles from Buca, he said:

"I clasped the neck of the wolf which attacked me. I stuck my left arm into the wolf's mouth and blocked his windpipe. But he still struggled. So I put my right arm round his neck and strangled him."

The wolves and other animals, believed to include leopards, attacked the flock at Kaymaklar, near Buca.

Bullet in Thigh Ends in Heart

WASHINGTON (AP)—A gunman's bullet entered Ivan's thigh, travelled through his blood vessels and ended up inside his heart—launching Ivan into medical history.

Chipper and getting well fast now after a three-hour open-heart operation, Ivan Malinovsky, 32, joined Georgetown University Hospital doctors Saturday in describing his ordeal of last February.

His heart had held the bullet for two weeks. The half-inch long, quarter-inch diameter, 25-calibre bullet had been temporarily lost in Ivan's body.

Surgeons at another hospital had probed in vain for it in the wounded thigh—only to find, by repeated X-ray studies higher and higher on the body, that it had lodged in Ivan's heart, three feet from the point of entry.

The mild-mannered, Russian-born manager of a Washington chain-grocery store was shot while playing hide-and-seek around his auto with a young, unidentified gunman who wanted Ivan to open up the closed store and empty the safe.

The doctors said there are 30 cases like Ivan's in all medical history—that is, cases where a bullet or other missile enters the body in one place and is carried via a blood vessel to the heart.

Most such cases, they told reporters, have been battle casualties from shrapnel.

way, Drs. Charles Hufnagel and Peter Conrad said.

Hufnagel is famous as the developer of plastic aorta valves which have saved the lives of many sufferers from congenital defects of the aorta, the main pathway of blood from the heart.

But no plastic bulb was needed for Ivan. The bullet didn't lodge anywhere near his aorta. It did come close to the pulmonary artery, another key

Market Split Delays One Europe—Again

ATHENS (AP)—Official sources say a persistent split among the six Common Market nations has again delayed action on the projected European union. A six-nation ex-pan political union. A six-nation experts' meeting scheduled for Saturday here was cancelled. European officials say there will be no session coinciding with the NATO conference now going on.

casts Friday as the revolt leader.

The informant said another rebel leader, Lt. Enrique Montero Montiel, was captured on the Venezuelan resort island of Margarita, about 50 miles off the coast. He fled there in a launch, the informant added.

ORDERS REFUSED

The third leader, identified as Lt. Alberto Osorio Jordan, was captured earlier, the source said.

Meanwhile, an Interior Ministry spokesman said that enlisted men participating in the uprising were refusing to take orders from their officers.

About 400 of the rebels ignored the ultimatum, however, and were reported to have scattered to positions in dwellings in the city of 16,500 to make a house-to-house fight.

BARRACKS BOMBED

They decided to abandon a high school building where they had set up headquarters after their barracks were bombed and strafed Friday.

Planes also bombed the city with leaflets calling for a rebel surrender.

One bomber returned to Caracas badly shot up. It landed on one wheel and blocked the airport for a time.

There were no reports of the casualties in the street fighting.

NATO To Get A-Subs

ATHENS, Greece (Reuters)—

The United States plans to bolster NATO defenses with five Polaris-armed nuclear submarines, it was reported Saturday night.

But the missile-firing submarines will remain firmly under U.S. control.

ENTIRE FLEET

Conference sources said U.S. Defence Secretary McNamara told a secret session of the 15-nation NATO council that eventually the entire U.S. Polaris submarine fleet in the Atlantic area will be committed to NATO defenses.

One source quoted McNamara as saying the U.S. expects to have 41 Polaris-equipped subs in service in 1964, the bulk of them in NATO's Atlantic area.

FINAL AUTHORITY

The NATO nations also heard and "confirmed" an Anglo-American plan giving other nations of the alliance a say in the maintenance of the U.S. nuclear deterrent in Europe.

But the plan, as in the case of the submarines, left the final authority for the use of the land-based nuclear weapons in the hands of the U.S. president.

PLAN CONFIRMED

A report on the plan was officially described as "confirmed" by the NATO ministers, rather than approved by a formal vote. In this way French reservations over the three-point plan were not forced into the open.

As for the submarines, the U.S. move will bring up to date a previous offer to put five of the vessels within the NATO network.

WASHINGTON—Rep. William Widnall commented: "The Lord's Prayer has 36 words, Lincoln's Gettysburg Address has 266, the Commandments 297, the Declaration of Independence 300. But a recent government order on cabbage prices has 26,911."

blood channel, which takes blood from the heart to the lungs.

If it had drifted into that artery after entering the heart, it might have been curtains for Ivan.

The bullet hit Ivan's right thigh on the inner side, just a few inches from the groin. It entered the "femoral" vein, the main venous pathway in the upper leg, which connects with the vena cava, the main vein leading to the heart.

The bullet coursed up through the latter channel which enters the heart at the right auricle, one of the upper chambers of the heart. Finally, it dropped down into the right ventricle where it became trapped under folds of muscle.

Doctors figure the bullet may have travelled to the heart almost immediately, rather than slowly, because, as Ivan himself put it:

"I felt a big pain when I was shot—I felt hot all over my body."

In an operation March 8, surgeons cut through Ivan's chest, exposing his heart. Then, with the aid of an artificial heart-lung machine, they cut off all blood flow to and from the heart. With the heart still beating, but free of blood, they made a two-inch-long slice through the heart muscle and probed for the bullet.

"We had to hunt for it," Hufnagel said. "It had stuck into the wall of the heart."

The surgeons worked 15 minutes inside the heart.

Ivan was out of bed several days after the operation and was released from the hospital about two weeks later.

The bullet? It's now in the hands of the police.

Diefenbaker

the London Free Press circulated a "poll" of sorts, asking this question:

"In your opinion, is the prime minister's speech a good one?"

The "yes" answers outnumbered the "no," 12 to one.

At the very beginning, the prime minister said he had come to "hometown Ontario not in the spirit of the Liberal masters you used to know, but rather as your servant."

He was at his best when he kept to the attack, and it was then he got his best response.

"WHACK 'EM"

"Whack 'em, John," a partisan bellowed from the rafters.

And "whack 'em" he did. Scornfully he referred to the Liberals as "those bureaucratic centralizers."

"BOSS-MINDED"

They were "boss-minded" and "glorified in pushing people around."

They had learned their lessons as "bureaucratic bullies" from the "old master, C. D. Howe," and his right arm, Mitchell Sharp, former deputy trade minister and now Liberal candidate.

"WHIMPERED"

They had "downgraded Canada."

They were campaigning by "personal attack."

They "whined and whimpered."

Liberal Leader Pearson he mentioned but once, referring to him as "the flying saucer of politics... you can't make head or tail of him... and he's never seen twice in the same place."

The prime minister on the platform was flanked by former Ontario premier Leslie Frost and by Premier Robarts.

The old premier got a better hand than the new, the prime minister referring affectionately to him as "Mr. Ontario."

LOOKED TIRED

There remains only this to be said... the prime minister looked tired... more tired than most people have ever seen him.

The night was hot and the London arena hotter... and the prime minister looked as if he felt every oppressive degree of it.

OFF AGAIN

After a round of hand-shaking... it took him 30 minutes to work his way off the platform and to the door... he flew back to the capital for a short rest Sunday before taking off on another exhausting week of airborne campaigning.

OXFORD, England (AP)—An Oxford University club has accepted a challenge to take part in an elephant derby at Orange County State College in Fullerton, Calif.

"They've already got an elephant. In fact, they've got a choice of 20, all guaranteed fit and ready."

All they need now is a well-heeled backer to pay for flying their pachyderm to the scene of the race, which will be held next Friday.

Raanan Gillon, who took up the challenge on behalf of the medical school's Pinwheel Society, told a reporter Friday:

"We need aerial round trip fares for our elephant, its trainer and a team of four handlers, including me. I am hopeful that some rich sporting gentleman will oblige."

"I think it is desperately important that Oxford University should meet the challenge and compete in the race. I am sure we would win. After all, our society's emblem is a pink elephant."

Your Good Health

Reduce Tranquilizers to Evade
Drowsy Feeling After Meals

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I am 56 and take a tranquilizer before meals. Lately I have been getting weak and drowsy after meals and early in the evening. What do you think is the cause of this?—A.D.

The dose of tranquilizer may be too great for you. Its reduction may be all that is necessary.

However, since there are varied reasons for taking tranquilizers, you should tell your doctor about this, and let him supervise the change in dose—or he may even want to substitute some other tranquilizer.

If the purpose of the drug, in your case, is simply to calm your emotions and nerves, then it would appear to be simply a case of your being made "too tranquil."

At the same time, the tranquilizers—and this was the original use to which they were put—may be more specifically aimed at controlling blood pressure. It could be that your doctor is more concerned over that than he is over your drowsiness. So that's why I want you to talk to him.

This sort of reaction is worth keeping in mind, in view of the widespread use of tranquilizers these days.

It should equally be kept in mind that individuals vary considerably in their reaction to the tranquilizers or, for that matter, any of the potent modern drugs.

It is possible for the manufacturers to indicate an average dose, but there is no way in the world for them to arrive at a dose that will suit everybody.

Thus dosage must be individualized, adjusted up or down to suit the person who doesn't happen to react exactly in the average way.

Dear Dr. Molner: Can a ruptured testicle cause a man to become sterile? If not, what would be a woman's need for fertile days with a cycle of 25 to 28 days?—Mrs. M.B.

It could cause sterility if both testicles were injured. If in doubt, medical tests would give the answer. Fertility is nearly always in mid-cycle, about the 12th to 16th day in a 28-day cycle. This can vary, earlier or later, so for any individual case, morning temperature readings daily (watching for a slight rise in temperature) will give a better clue to the correct time.

Note to T.S.: "Hepatic damage" is damage to the liver. Cirrhosis, or a scarring of the liver tissues, is one frequent type. Infectious hepatitis, an increasing threat, is another.

By SID MOODY
LAKEHURST, N.J. (AP)—In the darkening twilight, the dirigible age loomed above the pine barrens like a vast cloud. It ghosted towards the strange tower majestically, serenely. But the witnesses of its doom the judge and jury, were close at hand. They would write, and witness, its epitaph.

Louis Lochner, who flew on the Hindenburg on its maiden Atlantic crossing, said travel on a dirigible was like being held aloft by the angels. But May 6, 1937, the angels lost their grip and the Hindenburg crashed in flames, a pyre for 36 persons and a romantic era of flight.

Funeral Pyre for 36 Ended Romantic Era

The disaster stunned a world not yet accustomed to the sight of a torn airliner crumpled in the streets of a great city, an oily seat cushion bobbing on an ocean swell.

Today's air travellers stifle such memories. Another airliner awaits. They fly on.

But among the 36 persons who died on the Hindenburg were 13 paying passengers, the first to be killed on a commercial dirigible. They were also the last, a milestone and a tombstone.

More than 150 rigid dirigibles had been built before the Hindenburg. More than half had either crashed in spectacular peace time disasters or been shot down in war. Hundreds of military crew members and observers aboard had been killed.

But the dirigibles also made astonishing trips of endurance—crossing the North Pole, flying around the world on only four stops, soaring aloft with planes tucked inside.

Proponents felt—and those yet alive—still feel—the accidents were an inevitable consequence of an infant technology. Safety was improving all the time... with helium instead of hydrogen.

But the horror of the Hindenburg pictures seared the public memory with an indelible vision of dirigibles.

Without the Hindenburg disaster, airships might still be commonplace.

Thirty-six passengers boarded the Hindenburg at Frankfurt May 3, 1937.

For their $400 fare, the travellers were getting not only a luxurious two or three days aloft but a unique experience. Meals were cooked on board by a continental chef from a larder of lobsters, fowl and roasts. There was a lounge and a bar and 70 staterooms.

As a precaution, the smoking room had a double door entrance and it was kept under slightly higher air pressure to prevent any stray whiffs of hydrogen from seeping in.

The Hindenburg flew low over New York. The black clouds over Jersey made a regal backdrop for tourists who photographed the Hindenburg from the Empire State Building. But the clouds had fooled the weatherman. He had predicted partly cloudy for the day but these were thunder clouds.

Near the mooring tower the ship's crew threw down the mooring lines. Suddenly there was a bright flash in No. 4 gas cell near the tail.

The nose of the ship lurched upwards and the bust of Hindenburg tumbled from its pedestal in the lounge amid the falling passengers.

Thirteen passengers died. So

There was a bright flash... the nose of the ship lurched upwards and the bust of Hindenburg tumbled from its pedestal in the lounge...

Climbing Craze Kills 160

TOKYO (AP)—The climbing craze has given Japan a national record—160 killed and 277 injured—in mountain mishaps in 1961, a record which police say probably will be bettered this year. Japanese national police reported Saturday the 1961 death toll was an increase of 62 per cent over the previous year.

Laos Coalition With Reds 'Won't Work'

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Key members of the House foreign affairs committee believe the United States may be making a grave mistake in supporting a coalition neutralist government in Laos which would include Communists.

The apprehension became apparent last week as previously secret congressional testimony was made public.

'ONLY ALTERNATIVE'
Assistant Secretary of State W. Averell Harriman told the committee he strongly believed there was only one alternative to the policy and this would involve sending American troops to Laos.

But the statement drew heavy fire from a number of congressmen, including Rep. Walter Judd of Minnesota, a Far East expert and a top-ranking Republican foreign policy spokesman.

'CAN'T BELIEVE'
Judd said: "To believe the Communists now want a genuinely neutral Laos is to believe they have abandoned communism. This I can't believe."

A top Democrat, Rep. Wayne Hays of Ohio, told Harriman that he was not going to defend "any policy which insists on putting Communists in a government, because it has never worked and it will never work."

Red Chinese Take Town In Laos

VIENTIANE, Laos (UPI)—U.S. military sources said yesterday the rebel forces which captured the town of Muong Sing Thursday in a renewal of the Laotian civil war apparently came from Communist China.

They said the forces apparently included 200 Chinese. It was the first time American military sources have supported royal Laotian government claims that Red Chinese were taking part in military operations against loyal forces.

SUMMER DEMONSTRATION COURSE IN PRE-SCHOOL EDUCATION

Notice of Interest to Parents of Four- and Five-Year-Old Children

Victoria College, in conjunction with the Extension Department of the University of British Columbia, is offering a demonstration course in pre-school education at the Goosey Gander Kindergarten, 3538 Telegraph Bay Road, Victoria, from July 9th to July 27th inclusive. Instructing the class will be Miss Emma E. Harris, M.A., Chairman of the Department of Child Development, Washington State University, and Mrs. Roberta Emery, Director of the Goosey Gander Kindergarten.

An equal number of four- and five-year-olds are eligible for this observation class. If you are interested in having your child considered as an applicant, please contact the Victoria College Evening Division, EV 2-9131, Local 33. To cover the cost of supplies a fee of twelve dollars will be charged. Final date for enrolment is June 1st.

Spanish Crisis Grows

MADRID (UPI)—Armed Spanish police yesterday broke up demonstrations by Madrid college students in support of striking workers in the north who have confronted the government of Generalissimo Franco with its worst labor crisis since the Spanish Civil War.

Strikes have been illegal in Spain since the 1936-39 war. With more than 50,000 miners and industrial workers on strike, and another 30,000 in allied industries idled as a result, the government declared a state of emergency and rushed troops into Asturias.

'Blasted Gypsy Family' Brings Baker to Baker

SEATTLE (AP)—A retired captain in the British navy was here yesterday for a look at a mountain and an island that bears his family name.

Capt. Casper Vashon-Baker, 72, said he made the visit because:

"That blasted gypsy family of mine was always discovering something or having something named for them over here, so I thought it was about time I came over and had me a look-see for myself."

Mount Baker, a 10,750-foot peak in the Cascade Mountains north of here, was named for the captain's maternal great grandfather—Capt. Joseph Baker.

Capt. Vashon-Baker also is a great-grandson of Admiral James Vashon for whom Vashon Island in Puget Sound was named when it was discovered by Capt. George Vancouver in 1792.

Capt. Vashon-Baker's visit coincides with the 170th anniversary of the month in which Capt. Vancouver made his expedition to the Pacific northwest.

Capt. Vashon-Baker and his wife, who live in England, are staying with friends on Vashon Island.

Recess Plan Debated

GENEVA (CP)—A Soviet proposal to recess the deadlocked 17-nation disarmament conference for two months and then move it to New York was discussed Saturday at a luncheon given by Krishna Menon of India, conference sources reported.

ALL INVITED

The Soviet proposal, made informally by Valerian Zorin, deputy foreign minister, has not been put before a plenary session of the conference but is the subject of intensive backstage bargaining.

Mr. Menon gave the luncheon for the heads of all 17 delegations.

The U.S. is reported to dislike the idea of a long recess and moving the conference to New York.

The seven-week-old conference has produced no agreement except the vague outline of a preamble for a world disarmament treaty.

A progress report is scheduled to be submitted by the conference to the UN Disarmament Commission by June 1.

NEEDS REST

One reason Zorin wants to return to New York, some delegates believe, is to continue as head of Soviet delegations to the UN General Assembly and to the disarmament conference. The Western delegations and several of the middle-road delegations prefer to keep the talks in Geneva.

Zorin is reported to claim he asked for two months because he is badly in need of a rest.

Poisoning Case

Monitored Phone Calls Ruled Out as Evidence

PORT ORCHARD, Wash. (AP)—The judge hearing the case of a doctor accused of trying to poison his wife ruled out yesterday testimony of a long-distance telephone operator by which the state had hoped to show romance as a motive.

Interception of a telephone message in detail would be illegal, Superior Court Judge Frank Ryan held.

Dr. Robert Boehme, 42, is charged with assault with intent to kill his wife, Dorothy, 35, by injecting poison in her arm in the guise of taking a blood sample.

Sailor Shot In Gunfight With Patrol

YOKOSUKA, Japan (AP)—U.S. navy sailors shot one American sailor in a gunbattle yesterday and arrested four others later as material witnesses in the slaying of a Japanese policeman.

The navy identified the wounded man as seaman apprentice Richard Lee Jackson, 19, of Kansas City, Kan. It said all four of the material witnesses made statements naming Jackson as the man who killed the policeman in a brawl.

Looking Ahead

THE SUGGESTION of city council's public works committee that Greater Victoria municipalities combine their resources for a single project to mark the centenary of Confederation in 1967 is a good one, and should have general support.

It is gratifying too that a start has been made on giving thought to what the community should do for the occasion.

This 100th birthday of the nation—probably the last centenary of major consequence that Greater Victoria will celebrate for some decades, unless the province should decide to mark its century in Confederation in 1971—will by all portents be observed on a grand scale, and the aid to local efforts from the federal and provincial governments will be generous.

It is estimated that $500,000 can be spent on a project for this community if the Greater Victoria municipalities act jointly, and the possibility no doubt exists that the Capital Improvement District Commission could be brought into the picture, further enlarging this sum.

Two attractive potential projects, the improvement of the Gorge waterway and the provision of a fine arts building at the Gordon Head campus of Victoria University, have already been mentioned, and undoubtedly others will be added to the list before long.

The sooner the councils of the area come together on this matter and set the machinery of organization and planning into motion, the more likelihood there will be that the most satisfactory commemorative undertaking will be chosen, and that it will become a well designed reality in 1967.

Forging New Links

THE ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY could hardly have thought of a better way of enhancing its relationship with its friends and neighbors in Victoria than its program of bringing ships into the Inner Harbor at weekends for "open house" afternoon visits by the public.

Almost everyone is aware at least vaguely of the great economic and social contribution the navy quietly makes to the community life of Greater Victoria in countless ways.

But there is a world of difference between this general awareness and the interest, and pride, that come with visiting the sailors on board their ships, as they in turn invite inspection at the Canadian Pacific wharf.

Thousands of persons—no doubt including a proportion of early-in-the-season tourists, for to them too the warships constitute an attraction, contributing to their enjoyment during their Victoria stay—have so far taken advantage of the invitation to go aboard.

And as further thousands continue to do so through the summer, strong new links of friendship will be forged, to the benefit of both navy and community.

A Political Union

THE REAL aim of the European Common Market was cited afresh this week in a local address by the French consul-general, M. Robert Picard. It is not simply a matter of economics and trade, but of high political import.

This is inherent in the Rome treaty which set up the ECM, but it is a point ignored in most discussions of Britain's bid for entry into the union.

The ECM as such, M. Picard emphasized, is merely a step towards the larger goal, the political union of the countries concerned. It is this feature which causes concern to those who fear that Britain's entry cannot fail to have serious future repercussions for the Commonwealth.

M. Picard made it clear that Europe is being forced towards the creation of a third political force, able to match in weight of physical and economic strength the two giant blocs of America and Soviet Russia. "We live in an age of big units," he points out, "and being one of them will enable the European community to fight her way back to a leading position."

Economic growth depends on political unity, he said, and organization along these lines is the basic premise of the ECM.

It follows that this is bound to restrict the separate sovereignties of ECM members as this union proceeds and is gradually welded into one common whole. Nor if Britain joins the union can this fail to have a decided impact on the Commonwealth and its future.

Nuisance Value

IT IS AT LEAST the right spirit to enter an election with optimism, and if a party waited until it was a sure thing it would never make a bid at all. That much is to the credit of the Social Credit Party as it prepares itself to make some inroads in the federal field.

It is surely stretching wish into hope, however, to think that the Socreds will "fill a vital gap" at Ottawa, as stated by a local candidate. The present two opposition parties will assume that if there is a gap they are there to fill it, whereas the Conservatives will rightly conclude that so long as they are retained in office there is no gap.

The gap the Socreds have to overcome in fact is to get even one member elected to Parliament, and for a group which was without a single seat in the last House it is optimism in the extreme to imagine that it will "take the balance of power between the two old parties into our grasp."

To do this it would have to displace the NDP as a third element in Parliament, and capture enough seats into the bargain to give it the determining weight of influence. Such a jump from zero to a position of positive power would be in the nature of a minor political miracle.

The chief Socred aim must be to have nuisance value only, in the hope that by splitting the votes a fourth way a footing may be regained in the Ottawa House. In this sense therefore a Socred vote will be a wasted vote, balkanizing the complexion of the federal realm.

Washington Calling

A Liking for Campaigning

By ARTHUR BLAKELY

AS far as can be determined from the news despatches reporting his opinion, Prime Minister Diefenbaker was in deadly earnest when he wondered aloud in the presence of the reporters and commentators accompanying him if election campaigns weren't too long and arduous nowadays.

The prime minister answered his own question in the affirmative while flying from his home riding of Prince Albert to the national capital.

Election campaigns need not last as long in the circumstances of today, he said, if only because the modern aircraft can transport party leaders across the country in the space of a few hours.

How could a shorter campaign be effected? It could be done, Mr. Diefenbaker said, by abandoning the practice of compiling new lists of voters from scratch every time an election occurred. A permanent voters' list should be maintained, kept up to date between elections as part of a continuing process.

The prime minister was all for the shorter campaign which could result from such an innovation. He had discussed it with Liberal Leader Lester Pearson who, as he said, shared his view.

It's worth noting that at the time the prime minister offered his opinion on the matter, the formal opening of his 1962 election campaign was still almost a week in the future scheduled, as it was, for London, Ont., on May 5.

What, then, had the prime minister been doing out on the prairies?

The first leg of his western tour was billed as non-partisan and non-political, because of the nature of the engagement he had accepted in Port Arthur. But once he moved further west, he campaigned, and campaigned hard, in preparation for the June 18 general election. It was during a visit to his Prince Albert home, in fact, that Mr. Diefenbaker accepted another nomination to contest his home riding in the interests of the Conservative party. Nomination meetings are hardly ever non-political.

Mr. Pearson, of course, had formally opened his own election tour at Charlottetown, P.E.I., on Wednesday, April 25.

In point of fact, the formal opening dates of political campaigns mean little or nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Pearson have been out on the campaign trail for months. Some observers contend that their campaigns began in reality no later than last fall. And while it is true that each spent a good deal of time in the House of Commons while Parliament was in session, neither neglected the hustings.

National NDP Leader T. C. Douglas, unhampered by membership in the House of Commons, has been on the road for months. The national leader of the Social Credit party, Mr. Robert Thompson, has done likewise.

While the length of the election campaign program might well be curtailed by such means as Mr. Diefenbaker has mentioned, there is not the slightest evidence to suggest that such changes would make much difference in the amount of campaigning to be done by party leaders.

Many of the better political practitioners have, or have had, a genuine liking for campaigning. Mr. Diefenbaker is a case in point. Ex-President Harry Truman is another. W. L. Mackenzie King detested election campaigns and did as little field work as circumstances would permit. National Liberal Leader Lester Pearson, a civil servant transplant, is reported to be a much better and more enthusiastic campaigner than he was back in 1958. And this may well be. The latter wasn't a vintage year as far as Mr. Pearson's campaign style and technique were concerned. But this year, he's quick with the warm handshake and the chatty anecdote and shows signs of developing into a real enthusiast.

To Mr. Diefenbaker, this has always come naturally. Consider his recent visit to Prince Albert. The only real requirement was that he attend the nomination meeting and agree to be the PC candidate. But Mr. Diefenbaker could scarcely have limited his activities to this, even had he wished to do so.

He has his own "main-streeting" method of operating. It involves a brisk stroll through the town (if small) or the downtown area (where a city is involved), greeting old friends, making new ones, chatting with school children and talking things over with older citizens. It is effective. More to the point, he seems to enjoy it.

At his nomination meeting, after he's completed his "main-streeting" operations, the prime minister said warmly: "I had a wonderful day today, here among my friends and neighbors. I decided to walk downtown. To see all my old friends and neighbors come along and address me by my first name is something that you can't buy. It is this feeling, above everything else, that makes political life worth while."

The Packsack

By GREGORY CLARK

ISSUE No. 29 of the "Canadian Fish Culturalist," published in November last by the federal department of fisheries, is a 42-page blue pamphlet of extraordinary interest and value to Canadian farmers and sportsmen alike. It is devoted to the subject of fish ponds in Canada, with important statistics with regard to the two million farm ponds revealed in the latest United States census, and their function not only as means of fire prevention on farms, irrigation and water storage for livestock, but their growing value as fish ponds for trout, bass, sunfish, croppies and catfish.

Amazing figures are shown with respect to the production of fish in artificial farm ponds for the market. There is, for example, in the northeastern states, a U.S. Trout Farmers' Association, formed in 1933, with its trade journal, "U.S. Trout News."

The present estimate of Canadian farm ponds is 10,000, with indications that this number is rapidly increasing during the past five years. Mechanization of the farm has been a big incentive to the creation of ponds, for fire protection. But the increasing possibilities of recreation, and a tourist income, has now been added to the trend.

Mine Blast

By G. E. MORTIMORE

ONE hundred and eighty-four men were sentenced to prison for mine blasting, 25 years ago.

Magistrate John Cartmel of Nelson handed out penitentiary terms totalling 354 years to 84 men and 34 women.

President Paul Doumer of France was shot and killed by a "White Russian" fanatic.

The United States Senate finance committee decided to place import duties on lumber, copper, coal and gasoline—a move which threatened a loss of millions of dollars to Canada's export trade.

Fifty-five hundred dollars reward was posted for the delivery, dead or alive, of two outlaws who broke jail and murdered a provincial police constable at Clinton, N.C., 60 years ago.

Attorney-General Bower ordered an all-out manhunt for Moses Paul and Paul Bentham, who broke jail while awaiting trial at Kamloops, B.C., on a murder charge, and shot and killed Const. Alexander Kyness while making their escape.

Fifty-nine unidentified dead from the sinking of the White Star liner Titanic were buried in Halifax.

The White Star Company paid the expenses and sent flowers.

Number One Explorade shaft of the Vancouver Coal Company's Nanaimo mine blew up with an earth-shaking roar at 5.55 p.m., May 4, 1937.

One hundred and seventy-five men of the afternoon shift were at work, many of them in a mine tunnel stretching under the sea. When rescue parties dug through tons of rock to find all the bodies, the dead totalled 169. There were six survivors.

Samuel Hudson, a Wellington miner, died of suffocation when he went down the shaft in an attempt to rescue those who were entombed.

Richard Gibson, mayor of Nanaimo and owner of the afternoon shift, escaped. "He was . . . dazed, and was not able to give a connected account of the explosion . . ."

"A black pall hangs over Nanaimo. Business houses are closed, collieries are shut up and the entire population is gathered at the scene of the disaster."

"Weeping wives, terror-stricken children and sorrowing fathers hover in the vicinity . . . Women tear their hair in . . . sorrow, and continue to walk up and down mourning their loss."

Romance of Our Hymns

Arthur Stanley

By KATHLEEN BLANCHARD

ARTHUR Penrhyn Stanley was born at Alderley rectory, Cheshire, in 1815. He was the third son of the rector. The young Arthur was at Rugby school when Arnold was its famous headmaster. The boy and the man seemed to understand each other at once, for Arnold had a great insight into a boy's make-up. He was, at once, friend and adviser.

When at Balliol College, Oxford, Stanley showed his talent as a poet by winning the coveted Newdigate prize. For 10 years afterwards he was Fellow of University College, Oxford. He was an ardent advocate for reform in education.

He travelled widely, Palestine being his favorite goal. He wrote a book on the country, Sinai and Palestine. He also published another famous book of the time, Memorials of Canterbury.

A favorite at court, he married Lady Augusta Bruce (sister of Lord Elgin). For 18 years he was dean of Westminster.

How Dean Stanley came to write this hymn may be told in his own words. "On visiting some friends one day, and during conversation, they mentioned to me that the children had set some of their own hymns in the hymnbook about Ascension Day."

"I was determined to put that right, so I wrote these lines in 1839 for Ascension Day."

He is gone. A cloud of light Has received Him from our sight; High in heaven, where eyes of men

He is gone. But not in vain, Wait until He comes again; He is risen, He is not here, Far above this earthly sphere, Evermore in heart and mind Where our peace in Him we find, To our own eternal Friend, Thitherward let us ascend.

LETTERS to the Editor

To be considered for publication in whole or in part letters must be on subjects of general interest, not more than 200 words in length, and, if signed with a pen-name, must be accompanied by the writer's name and address.

What an improvement the provincial government has made in the travel period from Victoria to Vancouver, since I came to live in B.C. in 1944. It was always two nights and a day from Victoria to do business in Vancouver. Until we got a government with guts to go against the advice of the loud-mouth experts so-called, and put on a fast service between Sanich Peninsula and the lower Mainland...

The B.C. Ferry officials know what pays—why try to enforce a late service which would not pay? The CPR night boats did not pay so they were taken off. We in Victoria are very lucky to have such good ferry service, grand boats and lovely islands to see when travelling.

A. Caroline Bayfield was right in saying that "...starvation at home is not a pleasant outlook..." when referring to the exodus of skilled Canadians to the U.S. This was also the general situation with the thousands who left Ireland in recent years and the unfortunate who fled East Germany. The majority were seeking better jobs, wages and working conditions, not freedom from "Communism." Communism, or Socialism, has never existed yet, anywhere.

UN Progress 'Poisoned' By Cold War

By JOSEPH MACSWEEEN

UNITED NATIONS (CP)—An African diplomat with the United Nations says "few issues, if any, are debated on their merits here."

Apollo Kadumukasa Koronde of Uganda, which is scheduled to receive independence from Britain in October, said in an interview the cold war poisons UN debates.

"Perhaps this is as it must be. But one gets the impression that many discussions are devilled by the cold war on both sides. If someone from the West makes a proposal, he's shot down by Russia."

"I cannot suggest a solution. But we who are so far from the cold war—we feel very odd about it. We can only hope the UN will function as it should and will achieve its real purpose."

Uganda, with a population of 6,000,000 in an area half the size of Newfoundland, lies astride the equator, bordering the Congo, Kenya and Tanganyika.

Koronde, educated at University of South Africa and London's Middle Temple, is serving the Canadian delegation here as special adviser under Canada's Commonwealth African assistance plan.

At the same time, the 47-year-old lawyer is preparing a Uganda mission to the UN and, in this connection, is enthusiastic in praise of Canadian advice and assistance.

"We thought it best to link up with an older brother in the Commonwealth rather than the British delegation," he said. "The Canadians didn't stop with just showing me around the UN. They showed me how they make contacts, how they gather information, and how they use it along with such things as office routine and filing systems."

"We've learned as much from Mr. Koronde as he's learned from us," said Canadian ambassador Charles S. A. Ritchie, referring to the increasing importance of Africa in UN affairs.

Koronde, a teacher in Uganda for eight years, is slated to become ambassador to the United States and the UN after his country becomes independent.

The non-drinking, non-smoking African—a swimming ace in his school days—said he misses his wife and six children.

"I had started teaching some of my youngsters the piano and flute I learned from my father," he added wistfully.

Two Women In Contest

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. (CP)—Two women will contest the Niagara Falls constituency for the two major parties in the June 18 federal election.

The Progressive Conservative party Thursday night nominated Mrs. Jean Douglas, 54.

The Social Credit party has nominated Vito Antonio, 36-year-old car salesman.

The seat was held in the last Parliament by Miss Judy La Marsh, a Liberal, who has been nominated to run again.

Interior Congolese Switch Sympathy To Moise Tshombe

By BERNARD DUFRESNE

LEOPOLDVILLE (CP)—A Canadian teacher from Trois-Rivières, Que., says Congolese in the wild interior of the Congo are shifting towards acceptance of Moise Tshombe as the country's No. 1 leader.

Roger Garceau, 37, director of a boys' high school at Kikwit, 250 miles southeast of Leopoldville, says the change is occurring even in areas, such as Kikwit, that were solidly in favor of the late Patrice Lumumba, the Communist-leaning ex-venier who was Tshombe's sworn enemy.

"The Congolese in the interior," said Garceau during an interview here, "are hungry and see no prospect of better things. They know that in Katanga province Tshombe's people are working and earning money and are well-fed.

"They consider Tshombe as a great leader who is taking care of his people. And because the United Nations is doing nothing for them, their support is going to Tshombe in the hope of a better deal."

Garceau, who witnessed the demands of the Congolese in 1958 and 1959 for independence from Belgium, the post-independence riots, bloodshed and flight of Belgian settlers, made this flat prediction:

"Unless the UN does something quickly to improve the conditions the same thing will happen to it and its personnel as happened to the Belgians. They will be driven out. Then the Belgians will be welcomed back, stronger than ever."

Armed Intervention

The slightly-built, plain-spoken teacher said the UN's armed intervention in Katanga affairs last Autumn to oust foreign mercenaries from the army did much to drive the Congolese generally into Tshombe's camp.

In the eyes of people in the interior, Tshombe's recent stay in Leopoldville to negotiate a reconciliation between his secessionist province and the central government's Premier Cyrille Adoula stamps him as a man trying to help all Congolese.

Garceau, a bachelor and lay

"I am one of them," he explains with a smile.

Garceau came to Leopoldville to seek help from the UN for his school, the Kikwit Hospital run by nuns, and the 50,000 population now facing famine.

He said there will be no manioc crop this year. Manioc, a root that natives pound into a flour, is a staple of the Congolese. It takes two years to grow.

"In 1960," he said, Lumumba promised the Congolese that tractors would come down from heaven to help them grow manioc. So they did not bother to sow for another crop. Of course, the tractors never came and now they have nothing."

The normal Kikwit population of 30,000 has been swelled by 20,000 refugees from Kasai Province and from the Portuguese colony of Angola, putting a further strain on available food supplies.

Until recently he was able to feed his 170 pupils—all boarders—and his mixed staff of European and Congolese teachers with Russian flour and dried fish, gifts made during Lumumba's short-lived reign as boss of the Congo in 1960.

Tapped Other Sources

In Leopoldville he obtained a promise from the central government of enough rice, beans and dried fish to feed his students until the end of May. He tapped other sources for meat, eggs, poultry and jam for his teachers.

"What we really need are medical supplies," he said. "There isn't a drop of iodine or a single aspirin in Kikwit. Barefoot Congolese must walk on their foot-sores because the hospital has no bandages or medicine for them. The hospital isn't taking any more patients because the sisters have nothing to treat them with."

Garceau said "appeals have been made to the UN here but they were turned down because, officials said, they had received no orders from New York."

Apart from the missionaries and teachers and four or five Portuguese traders, all other whites have left Kikwit, once a prospering centre of the palm oil industry. The palm plantations are rapidly returning to jungle because there are no whites to organize the work and no market.

Garceau said he plans to visit Canada this summer, for the first time in three years, to seek assistance from friends.

EXTRA VOLUME
During the rainy season the 740-foot-high Kikwit Falls in British Guiana are about 300 feet wide.

Helpfulness And Integrity

To be helpful is, in our opinion, to provide the benefit of our experience, the dependability of our facilities and personnel, and the assurance of integrity in matters of cost.

Kennedy's Inner Sanctum

Magic Word White House Key

By HAROLD MORRISON

WASHINGTON (CP)—All you have to do these days to get an appointment with President Kennedy's inner sanctum of advisors is to mention the word "disarmament." Doors that have been closed suddenly are whipped open.

The Kennedy administration is going to great pains to make sure the world is well acquainted with every last detail of the American three-stage disarmament plan.

Almost daily, foreign correspondents based in Washington are invited to attend discussions on the plan placed before the 17-country Geneva disarmament conference, where it was immediately rejected by the Soviet Union.

But the more extensive the discussion the more obvious it becomes that the American plan contains a number of contradictions and that it was painstakingly put together to divorce it from the realities of current world affairs.

As one high-placed American authority put it: The plan envisages a political world created far different from what it is today. Old ideas of sovereignty and national boundaries will have to be discarded. Old ideas of nations building defences to defend themselves will have to give way to agreement to allow a world force—the United Nations—to take over responsibility for that defence.

"We are beginning to have a feel for this new world," said one official in a burst of enthusiasm over the American plan. But he conceded it was obvious that his enthusiasm was not shared by the Kremlin.

Nor, it might be suggested, would it be shared by a large portion of the American Congress, especially the right-wing element which has criticized the Kennedy administration for placing too much reliance on the UN.

One of the major contradictions centres on the sticky issue of international inspection and control to verify that each country actually carries out pledged arms reductions. Russia maintains this merely is a new attempt by the Americans to spy on Russian defences. The Americans counter that on-site inspection is absolutely essential to make sure there is no cheating.

Yet at the same time one of Kennedy's closest advisers confided that the United States is so advanced in detection that it not only knows what Russia has in the way of military goods and soldiers, it also knows what the Chinese have. It is the American knowledge of what the Communists have developed that makes the American disarmament negotiators confident that both Russia and the U.S. could make percentage cuts in their arms stockpile "because U.S. and Russian military defences are roughly in balance."

But if the U.S. is so confident that it knows exactly what the Russians have, why does it persist in demanding on-site inspection at the outset as the key part of any negotiable disarmament agreement? Why does it not continue to count on its present method of detection?

The stock answer is that what the U.S. knows is not neces-

Strike on Way Out?

Bargain Appeal Hits Eager Ear

By FRANK DREA

Telegram News Service

The United Steelworkers appear to have struck a most responsive nerve in Canada's industrial society with their appeal for an earnest search by labor and management for an alternative to the strike weapon in collective bargaining.

But even the steelworkers, long used to being in the spotlight as the elder statesmen of Canadian labor, are slightly unnerved at the unprecedented response to their proposal.

And, the rest of the labor movement, from Canadian Labor Congress president Claude Jodoin down to the local union level, is insisting that the strike weapon must be retained if labor is to continue as a potent force.

There is also a great deal of mumbling in labor circles that the steelworkers are using a pie-in-the-sky idea to capture a rash of headlines and favorable publicity.

The truth of the matter is that the steelworkers have long considered the strike an outmoded labor weapon. It is too expensive to be frequently used and the cost of either winning or losing has become too high for working people.

Charles Millard, former director of the steelworkers and former organizing director for world labor, feels the strike may be on its way out. But, before the strike passes into historical oblivion Mr. Millard feels there must be a vastly improved mediation service both in scope and in personnel.

The basic proposal of William Mahoney, Canadian director of the steelworkers, is that management and labor must sit down together to explore methods of finding an acceptable alternative to the strike as an economic weapon of either labor or management.

While it is often forgotten, a strike is often more advantageous to management than to labor. Conversely, strikes are often conducted under conditions harmonious to labor.

"If we sit down together in an atmosphere of co-operation, we could conceivably come up with an alternative to strikes," said Mr. Mahoney. "But, for either side to withdraw to a corner and try to evolve such a formula would be meaningless."

The steelworkers have pioneered in this in the U.S. basic steel industry where one of the highlights of the settlement in 1959 that ended the lengthy American strike was the establishment of a human relations committee.

This committee would bring management and labor together to work out problems in productivity, employment, grievances and day-to-day relationships in the industry. This was to be the first step toward the gradual elimination of the causes of friction between the two sides.

Unfortunately, with the exception of Kaiser Steel, the committee has not made much progress.

The Well-Rounded Tony

Actors are getting fearfully articulate one of the terrible side effects of universal education, and one of the more outspoken representatives of this new species of over-educated actor is Tony Randall, a very good comedian who has opinions on everything, everything, and does everything, everything, from weight-lifting to directing.

"I've been considering giving up my career to become an actor again," he declared brightly the other day. "I offered my services free of charge to the Lincoln Centre's Repertory Group. They never called me back. I offered my services free of charge to Tyrone Guthrie for his theatre in Minneapolis. My wife even said she'd leave me if I went to Minneapolis, but I did it anyway. Mr. Guthrie never called me back."

Randall is now acknowledged to be the leading, almost the only, exponent of a certain comic type. "The man I played in Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? was the average seeker, a young, nameless man in a man, in a way. He was a status-hungry company hoping he would get the key to the executive washroom some day."

Randall doesn't think of himself as a comedian but as an actor who plays comedy. "I don't think my humor is sick. Except that all humor is sick. It's just a matter of degree. It has always been useful for getting rid of hate, aggression, anger, sadness, and so forth. Chaplin was the average man of his day. He was an outcast, despised and spat upon, poverty-stricken. He was a tramp. He made fun of the rich and people of style who spat upon him."

"Many Americans of the Chaplin era were immigrants with their own habits which were peculiar to that day. They were spat upon, too. And there were lots of tramps. When I was a boy in Oklahoma, there were always tramps coming to the door, asking for work and a meal. Today there are no tramps, only bums."

"The average man is a Jules Feiffer character. He doesn't have the eccentricities of the rural life, no homemade clothes, no funny haircuts or shoes. We all live the same way in cities. We can buy the same shoes, suits, shirts—identical in every way, no matter where we are. And we're identical. The society produces its own outcasts and rebels and its own ridiculous types and they are fair game for humorists. The rich neurotics I've played in Lover Come Back and Pillow Talk were just Stanley Shapiro's private joke. They have little to do with society. They're just funny."

Randall claims he's the world's greatest opera fan. "I can go every night of my life. I don't like going to the theatre unless the performances are really great, and for me there has been only one great performance this year and that was Donald Pleasance in The Caretaker. Actually some of the greatest acting I've ever seen is in the opera. Vinay's Otello, Babieri's Il Trovatore, Leonard Warren's Rigoletto—they somehow get carried away under the power of the music and reach heights an actor never reaches. Of course, too, they don't do the role every night for months and when they do it, they bring such amazing freshness to it."

He mourned the fact that there were no longer any great stars in the American theatre. "Plays with people like Charles Boyer and Mary Martin close here in a few weeks. That's unheard-of in England where they have real stars with great followings. Robert Morley can play in anything and run a year in London."

Critic at Large

Rollicking Comedy Hit of Week

A rollicking three-act comedy, an oratorio and a choral concert make up the program of live entertainment for the coming week.

Sailor Beware is on at St. Matthias Parish hall, Richmond at Richardson, Monday through Saturday, although Monday is a sponsored night.

This comedy, by Phillip King and Falkland Cary, was a huge hit in London and also ran 500 performances on Broadway.

Richard Litt directs the Victoria production for the St. Matthias Little Theatre Society and the cast comprises Joy Richards, Doris Exton, Jo Pepper, Nancy Jane Maynard, Vanessa Lax, Archie Anderson, Tony Maynard, Stanley Bowles and John Richards.

Felix Mendelssohn's Elijah will be sung in Christ Church Cathedral Wednesday evening. Its premiere performance at the Birmingham (England) Festival of Aug. 26, 1846, met with overwhelming enthusiasm.

But Elijah had been in the forefront of the composer's mind for years before. Along with other compositions, it suffered its worst setback during the winter of 1836-37 when Mendelssohn fell in love with a certain Mlle. Cecile Jeanne-naud.

"I can neither compose, nor write letters, nor play the piano!" he wrote.

Fortunately for the future of the Elijah and, indeed, for the future of Mendelssohn himself, Cecile reciprocated the feelings of Felix. They were married in March, 1837. His musical career resumed and, with it, further work on Elijah.

For the Victoria Choral Society presentation Wednesday evening there will be an adult chorus of 75, a boys' choir for the part of the angels' chorus, a 16-piece orchestra, organ accompaniment and four soloists.

The soprano will be Erika Kurth; contralto, Eleanor Duff; tenor, Michael Rogers; baritone, Stanley Martin and boy soloist, John Peter.

The director is Rodney Webster, the organist is Richard Proudman. The performance starts at 8 p.m.

The well known and popular Meistersingers, with assisting artists Ruth Champion and Marjorie Sturgeon, provide a concert at Edward Church Hall on Arbutus Road Saturday at 8:15 p.m. The program is varied and interesting.

John Dunbar's LP recording, Here's to Bonnie Scotland, is due for release on the London label Friday, May 11.

The Scottish concert from Victoria, Swing o' the Kilt, which paid a very successful visit to Courtenay April 28, goes to Portland Thursday.

Included among the dancers are two new champions of the recent Centennial Dance Festival, Gloria Smith and Angus McKenzie.

Pianist Grace Timp, accordionist Ronnie Chisholm, pipers Gordon and David Ross and drummer John Brown are the instrumentalists.

World's champion Highland dancer, Miss Betty Jessiman of Huntly, Aberdeenshire, will be a feature attraction on the program along with popular baritone John Dunbar and contralto Eleanor Duff.

The Portland show at the Lincoln High School auditorium is presented by the St. Andrew's Society of Oregon.

As a matter of fact there is going to be quite a southbound exodus on Thursday. The Oak Bay High School Choir and Chorus also leaves that day for performances in Tacoma.

The Chinatown Lions Club will present the 1962 edition of the Nanaimo Lions Minstrel Show May 17 at Central Junior High. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Selection of the 1962-63 Miss Sidney takes place at Sansa Hall on Beacon Avenue, Sidney, May 18.

There are two changes in the cast of The Gypsy Baron, due for presentation by the Victoria Gilbert and Sullivan Operatic Society, May 21 to 23, at the Royal Theatre.

What's Next?

Monday through Saturday—Sailor Beware, St. Matthias Hall, 8:15 p.m.

Wednesday—Elijah, Christ Church Cathedral, 8 p.m.

Saturday—The Meistersingers and assisting artists, Edward Church Hall, Arbutus Road, 8:15 p.m.

May 14—Victor Borge, Esquimalt Sports Centre, 8:00 p.m.

May 17—Minstrel Show, Central Junior High, 8:00 p.m.

May 21 to 23—The Gypsy Baron, Royal Theatre, 8:15 p.m.

Light Takes Giant Step With Realistic Vibrations

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER

Once more Enoch Light has taken a step forward on the road to better entertainment on records.

It's called "Vibrations." Light has extended his "percussion" technique to make this sound even more realistic without being more bombastic. The result is more pleasure for audiophiles.

The first LP devoted to this concept of sound is called Vibrations by Enoch Light and the Light Brigade (Command RS 833 SD).

More good work can be found, too, on Experiment in Terror (RCA Victor LSP-2442). Oscar-award winner Henry Mancini wrote and directed this score for the novel, Operation Terror. Mancini uses an instrument called the auto-harp on the main title.

Experiment in Terror, to achieve dramatic results.

For Twisters—Singles: Tequila With a Twist by Ray Anthony (Capitol 4728). Anthony updates a Latin song and backs it with Bunny Hop Twist, a variation on a dance that Ray helped create.

LP: Twist Party, Vol. 2, by The Ventures (Dolton BLP-2014). Blue Tail Fly and Swanee River Twist are high lights of this group of musical gyrations.

For Teen-Agers—Just a Moment of Your Time (ACE

655) is another hit tune for Jimmy Clanton, a talented youngster who does not rely on his clean-cut appearance. Kathy Brandon is just entering the wonderful world of the teen-ager and her recording of Don't Go (Crysalite 748) indicates we may have another Peggy Lee.

The Gilders by Roy and The Original Jones Boys (Smash S-1754) soars high but makes a safe landing.

LP's of the Week—(Mono) Between Heaven and Hell by Oscar Brown Jr. (Columbia CL-1774). Brown has many talents but here he is spotlighted as a first-rate singer.

(Stereo) Buddy Holly and The Crickets (Coral CRL 757405). A dozen songs that made Holly a star before his fatal accident are played back. Among them his first million-seller, That'll Be the Day.

Ruggiero Ricci, the violinist who often has been compared in style and musical aesthetics to Fritz Kreisler is the first virtuoso to get out a recorded "tribute" to Kreisler. He plays 14 of Kreisler's own violin pieces including, in addition to the still familiar ones, some of those which had slipped out of sight (Decca-710052).

A musically and acoustically impressive recording of Debussy has the Colonne Concerts Orchestra of Paris, Pierre Dervaux conducting, playing La Mer, Fetes and Iberia (Command-11008). This is one of the best examples yet of the advantages of recording onto magnetic film rather than tape.

form with absolute authenticity.

Ben Casey Smiles! And No Wonder

By DONALD FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD—Ben Casey smiled. It was startlingly out of character, of course. But there he was—Vincent Edwards, who portrays Dr. Ben Casey on the smash ABC series and, by way of acknowledging our introduction on the set, he had unloosed a small but genial smile.

"It's unheard of," I said. "Why shouldn't I smile?" demanded Edwards, otherwise known as the surly surgeon or even as the misanthropic medic. "Life's a ball. Everything's going well. My car was just waxed. My career's on the upswing. The show's rating is high. The crew's fun to work with. I'm going on a vacation. I've just been offered three pictures. Why shouldn't I smile? And—oh yes, my blouses are selling great guns."

"Your blouses?" I said. "You're in the blouse business?"

"In a manner of speaking," he said. "The Ben Casey blouses. I got 75 per cent of the action."

We sat down in Edwards' trailer dressing room. He's a big fellow, 6 foot 2, over 200 pounds, with long, heavy swimmer's arms. He wore a doctor's blouse and it was, as any Monday night viewer might expect, unbuttoned at the right shoulder.

"I've been sniffing around the edges of success for a long time," Edwards said, "and finally something's happening."

"I keep looking ahead," Edwards said. "There'll be two more years of 'Ben Casey'—actually three more seasons on TV and that's it. Then I want to do Broadway plays and pictures, the kind of pictures Bogie used to do. I'm a big Humphrey Bogart man. I'd like to pattern my career after Bogart's."

"In spite of all that," Edwards said, amiably, "in spite of all the problems of success, which will take care of themselves, anyway, I look around at what's happened and, Ben Casey or no Ben Casey, I've still got to smile, wouldn't you?"

Civic Guests

Bank Plans Lunch

Provincial government and civic leaders will be guests of top officials of the Bank of Montreal at a luncheon at the Empress Hotel Monday.

Guests at the affair will include Lieutenant-Governor Pearkes, Premier Bennett, members of the provincial cabinet, Mayor R. B. Wilson and the reeves of Oak Bay, Saanich and Esquimalt.

CHARTERED BUS

Thirty-five directors of the bank are scheduled to visit Victoria Monday by chartered bus and ferry.

Following the luncheon the executive committee of the bank's board of directors will meet in the hotel to prepare for a regular board meeting in Vancouver Tuesday.

THIRD TIME

It is the third time in the bank's 163-year history that the directors have convened for a regular meeting away from the Montreal headquarters. In 1960 a meeting was held in Toronto and last year another was held in Winnipeg.

Red Cross Citations Ceremony Set May 12

At least 37 British Columbia citizens from most sections of the province will receive Red Cross citations for donating 50 or more pints of blood at a special ceremony at 2.30 p.m. at Government House May 12.

The awards will be presented by Lieutenant-Governor Pearkes. Citations will be mailed to an additional 41 donors who cannot attend.

Pegged Dollar Boosts Shares

By PETER DUNN
Canadian Press

A surprise announcement from the federal government this week helped the stock market stage a comeback from the battering it took a week ago.

Last week's 15-point index drop in industrials left traders wary; their "wait and see" attitude continued until mid-week. After news Wednesday night that the Canadian dollar had been fixed at 92.5 cents in terms of its U.S. counterpart, however, buyers rushed to the fore.

BEST DISPLAY

Industrials gave their best display of the year—a six-point index jump Thursday. The index eased fractionally Friday but was up more than nine points on the week.

Although volumes remained about the same as they had been during the market's decline, total share value was up more than $10,000,000, with the industrial market accounting for most of the rise.

PAPERS RISE

Papers benefited most among industrials from establishment of the lower dollar rate. Highs for the year were made by Abitibi, Great Lakes Paper and MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River. Gains ranged from $1.00 in MacMillan to more than $2.00 in Abitibi. International

Industrials Jump Six Points

Paper was the lone loser. It hit a 1962 low of $34.25 before closing at $35.12, down $1.37. Utilities were mixed to higher. Shawinigan fared better than in recent weeks, gaining $1.00 to $23.

DECLINES STEEP

Gains outnumbered losses in the refining oils and pipelines group, but the declines were steeper than the advances. New lows were hit by Superpet, Texaco, Trans-

Canada Pipe Line climbed most, $2.25 to $84.75.

Control of Russell Industries was acquired by Levy Industries early in the week through the successful bid of $20 each for 419,000 Russell shares. The Levy bid countered an earlier anonymous offer to buy 380,000 Russell shares at $18.50 each.

STEELS ACTIVE

Russell dropped $3.12 to $14.42, while Levy slipped $1.00 to $17.25 after earlier striking $19—its best price this year. Steels were active, with lower prices prevailing in most issues. Algoma, however, gained $1.00 to $50, and Atlas Steel climbed $1.87 to $31.87. Steel Company of Canada, trading in its first week following a four-for-one stock split, fluctuated between $20.50 and $21.12, closing at $21.

Meeting Set

Oak Bay to Air Duplexes Move

No new duplexes will be built in Oak Bay if council follows through on its plan to keep the appearance of the municipality up to snuff by prohibiting such developments. A public hearing will be held on the issue at the Oak Bay municipal hall at 7.30 p.m. tomorrow.

Existing duplexes would not be affected by the bylaw even if they change ownership, municipal engineer Geoffrey White said yesterday.

Included in the public hearing will be two applications for the rezoning to residential of two lots now zoned for three-storey apartments. These lots are at the corner of Satellite and Beach Drive and at Glenlyon School on Beach Drive.

The new duplex control bylaw would prevent property owners from either building new duplexes or converting existing single family dwellings into duplexes, said the engineer.

Oak Bay has enough well constructed apartments with landscaped open space, and single family dwellings, to accommodate the population, he said.

Mr. White added that at the present time there is "no significant demand" for duplexes.

'Threads' Report Progress

Reports on a year of program establishment were heard at the recent annual meeting of the Silver Threads Service.

Owen Karn, president, was chairman at the meeting, which named these new board members: W. E. Whitely, Miss G. L. Kensington, Mrs. Kae Allan, H. A. Craven, Mrs. William Logie, Col. A. D. Murdoch, R. H. French, Mrs. J. Bennett, Peter Davey and Dr. Henrietta Anderson.

Work of the past year was outlined by executive director Glen Hamilton. Mr. Karn reminded members of the strides taken since the agency was established in 1957.

They also ask if a pro-rata system of acceptance is desirable.

One local dealer said: "I am glad the Montreal Exchange is taking the matter up. I think it is only right that every shareholder be given an equal chance of accepting offers such as this. I favor the pro-rata system."

Engineers to Hold Gallery Reception

Members of Vancouver Island branch, Engineering Institute of Canada, will entertain Dr. Bristow Guy Ballard, Canadian president, and Mrs. Ballard next Saturday. A reception and dinner will be held at the Victoria Art Gallery, which will be attended by members and their wives.

Fire Chiefs' Hint

Permits Due Again

Sunny skies brought a gentle hint from fire chiefs in some of the Greater Victoria municipalities that now is the time to renew rubbish burning and incinerator permits.

LONG PERIOD

In Saanich, summer-long permits are now being issued to homeowners who call in person or request them by mail.

The permits cover the period from April 1 to the end of October. Beyond that time, permits are not necessary.

Permit holders are allowed to burn rubbish in covered incinerators through hot spell "closures."

ties that now is the time to renew rubbish burning and incinerator permits.

A total of 3,000 permits have been issued so far, a fire department spokesman said.

In Victoria, burning regulations remain unchanged with the advent of summer.

NEW ISSUE

Burning permits are issued on a six-month basis, with the new issue good from April 1 to Sept. 30.

Oak Bay will have their 1962 stock of burning permits ready for issuance by the end of the month, while in Esquimalt, a spokesman said burning regulations remain unchanged, with permission granted according to weather conditions.

Bottle caps, broken glass and miscellaneous debris vanished from Southern Vancouver Island beaches yesterday as an army of Boy Scouts carried out their annual clean-up campaign.

Boy Scout officials said there was no estimate of the tonnage of debris collected, but said it was "considerable."

Steel Piping Puzzle Points to Vancouver

For the past two months or more the people of Victoria have watched with interest as truck after truck has passed northward along Government Street steadily loaded with giant size steel piping.

"Where is it going from, and where is it coming from?" I was asked the other day, and all I could answer was that I presumed it came from the Victoria Machinery Depot, which makes steel piping, but whether bound it did not know.

As others perhaps are curious, too, I phoned VMD and was told the pipes now being shipped are part of a large order for new water mains in the Greater Vancouver area.

NEW SERVICES

For the mushrooming suburban areas of Greater Vancouver, new services are a No. 1 priority and the pipes now being made at VMD—more than five miles of them—are being laid in such areas as Surrey and Richmond.

Anything between nine and 15 of these pipes—according to diameter—are being trucked to the mainland via the government ferry service.

At the moment VMD is turning out 800 feet a day of 42-inch diameter pipe with a 1/4 inch steel wall, and that is the largest size the contract calls for. Most of it is in 36-inch pipe of which 12,000 feet is needed. The total order calls for 28,000 feet.

The present order with the Greater Vancouver Water Board will keep the VMD pipe-makers busy until June, when they hope to get a further order from the same source.

CAR TASTE CHANGES

The public taste for automobiles in the United States has swung back to the larger, medium-priced car this year, says Value Line Investment Survey of New York.

This has enabled General Motors, which spent less on tooling up for its 1962 models than some of the others, to increase its share of the market in the first quarter to 55 per cent.

Value Line says in view of anti-trust bars this is of some embarrassment to G.M., but it adds "the company cannot prevent its dealers from selling cars, or still the clamor of a fickle public whose taste has veered to the type of car that only G.M. makes any more."

The first quarter of 1962 suggests that automobile sales in the U.S. are going to be the largest since record breaking 1955. Production in the first quarter was up 49 per cent from a year ago and the estimate for the full year is 6,800,000 units, up 23 per cent from 1961.

ALUMINIUM BOUGHT

Purchases made for the All Canadian Funds during the quarter ended March 31 included 9,000 shares of Aluminium Ltd.; 2,500 shares of Bank of Montreal; 2,500 shares of Bank of Nova Scotia; 2,000 shares of Royal Bank; 9,400 shares of Salada Foods; 7,500 shares of Steinberg's Ltd.; 500 shares of Guaranty Trust and 280 shares of Montreal Trust. It also acquired $599,100 of short-term commercial notes and trust company deposits.

Shareholders Feeling a Bit Bitter

Code of Ethics Russell Deal Sequel?

By HARRY YOUNG Colonist Business Editor

A number of shareholders of Russell Industries are feeling rather bitter as a result of a series of actions which caused the market price of the stock to rise from about $11 to $21 and then fall back again to $14.

The point of their annoyance is that some of the directors of the company accepted an offer of $20 a share for a limited number of Russell shares by Levy Industries.

Most of the individual shareholders did not get to know of the offer in time to offer their own shares before the purchasers had accepted as many as they required.

That the directors on the inside track should have taken advantage of their position by getting in first with their shares is regarded in many circles as unfair practice.

However, it is quite a normal proceeding when an offer is made for a portion of another company's shares that the deal should be made on a first-come, first-served basis. There is no reason to believe the Russell Industries directors who took the offer and left other shareholders holding the bag thought they were doing anything wrong.

Yet there is a strong feeling among many investors that when an offer covering a portion of a company's share capital is made, it should be filled on a pro-rata basis, giving everyone the same chance to participate.

It is to be noted a similar thing could have happened recently with MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River when a coterie of directors endeavored to make a deal to sell a block of shares to a rival company at about $3 above market price.

J. V. Glyne, chairman of MacMillan, said he did not think it fair that directors should consider taking offers for blocks of shares not available to all shareholders, and he took the extreme steps of having the directors in question ousted from the MacMillan board.

This is precisely the sort of thing which happened in the east over Russell Industries.

The Russell affair and others of their kind have so perturbed the executive of the Montreal and Canadian Stock Exchanges they have sent out a quiz to members to find out if a code of ethics can be created to control this situation.

The exchange particularly instances cases in which the offers are made through trust companies by unidentified parties.

In the past three weeks helicopters on Vancouver Island have dropped tons of preservative chemicals on log booms in Vancouver Island rivers, lakes and inlets, but fisheries officials say there is little likelihood that any harm will be done to fish stocks.

The spraying, which was started at Tahsis and has been carried out down-island through Alberni, Sproat Lake and Cowichan Lake, with approval and assistance of fisheries officials on both provincial and federal levels.

Regional fish biologist David Hurn told us the spraying program has been carried out for several years and when properly supervised has resulted in little loss of fish.

He said live boxes containing fish have even been placed under log booms being sprayed, to test the toxic affects of the sprays.

"We are convinced the losses of fish are negligible," he said.

Live boxes, containing rainbow trout, are now in position in Langford Lake, as part of final tests to see if toxic qualities of the lake after rehabilitation treatment two years ago, and to see if the lake is ready for restocking with bass.

Biologists have requested that the public refrain from tampering with the live boxes.

"As soon as the lake is proven clear, we will start the bass work," biologist Hurn said yesterday.

Because funds have not been made available for a bass netting program, it is likely fish and game club members, or others, will be asked to help catch bass for the restocking program.

Glen Lake, which last week was stocked with another 3,000 three to four-inch rainbow fingerlings, is being used as a control lake for the Langford tests.

Dougan's Lake was also stocked last week with 2,400 rainbow fingerlings.

Fisheries branch officials warn that Mathewson Lake, off Rocky Point Road, will remain closed until a bass population has been established. At present there is a short cutthroat trout season at Mathewson, which will be developed as a provincial park sometime, and bass are being introduced to provide a summer-time fishery.

For the second year in a row Vancouver Island's Salmon River has gone on record as producing Canada's biggest steelhead. In 1960 Victoria's John Olsen won top honors in the Hunting and Fishing Canada-wide contest and Sayward angler Bob Davidson has just received word and a certificate of top honors in 1961 for his 23:10 steelie taken in January of last year.

Fish and Game Club will hold a practice trap shoot at its Goldstream clubgrounds, starting at noon today.

Fishing chapter of the Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association has a spectacular series of events and meetings planned.

On May 22, the chapter will sponsor a general meeting of the fish and game club, at which well known conservationist and fishing writer Roderick Haig Brown will be guest speaker.

The June meeting will be devoted to bass fishing, with two-time King Fisherman contest bass winner Jack Seedhouse scheduled as speaker, along with a fine film about bass fishing.

July meeting will feature films about the behavior of Pacific salmon.

The fishing chapter has completed plans for a special fishing float to be constructed at Prior Lake, in Thetis Lake Park, for casting demonstrations and practice. Bob Lindsay will be in charge of the project and construction is scheduled to start as soon as city public works committee approval is given to the plans.

Hector MacKenzie has been named to head a committee which will look into the possibility of gaining fishing access to some of the lakes in the Greater Victoria Water Board watershed area.

Arnie Snaps Tie

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) —

Arnold Palmer broke open a two-day deadlock in the $58,000 Tournament of Champions Saturday, firing a three-under-par 69 to take sole possession of the lead with a 54-hole score of 208.

Palmer and another former national open champion Billy Casper Jr., waged a tremendous head-and-head duel around the 7,000-yard par 36-36-72 Desert Inn Country Club course. Each wound up with 69s.

But for Casper, it meant a total score of 209 and a tie for second place with 40-year-old Earl Stewart Jr., a teaching pro from Dallas, Tex.

Casper put together a string of four straight birdies, beginning with the 13th hole, to pull even with Palmer. They came to the par-four 18th all square.

CASPER HITS TREE

Hard luck then hit Casper. His tee shot hit a tree and the ball went into the rough. He blasted out short and wound up with a five, the only hole during the round in which he was over par.

Defending champion Sam Snead shot his second straight 75 for 220.

The final round goes on today. It will be televised nationally from 2 to 3 p.m. (PDT). In event of a tie there will be an 18-hole playoff Monday.

Burnley Bows, 3-1

Hotspur Repeats Cup Victory

LONDON (Reuters)—Tottenham Hotspur of London, the glamour team of English soccer, defeated Burnley 3-1 before 100,000 fans at Wembley Stadium to win the coveted Football Association Cup for the second consecutive year.

Spurs, who have a reputation for winning the games that count, are only the second team this century to win the cup in successive years. Newcastle accomplished the feat in 1951-52.

Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip watched the match from the royal box and presented the cup to Tottenham captain Danny Blanchflower, who scored Spurs' third goal on a penalty kick.

Jimmy Greaves, a little inside-right with a magic scoring touch whom Tottenham bought for £100,000 from an Italian team earlier this season, put the winners ahead 1-0 only three minutes after the game started.

Burnley's Jimmy Robson tied it shortly after half time, but Bobby Smith made it 2-1 only a minute later. Blanchflower's goal came 10 minutes before the final whistle.

Burnley was nosed out in the final games by unrated Ipswich for the league title, but the luck of the draw kept them from meeting Tottenham in the Cup competition—run separately from league play—until the final.

The result was a fast and exciting match. Ironically, Burnley dominated the territorial play and it was Spurs' defence, rather than their vaunted attack, which earned the victory. Ironically, Burnley dominated the territorial play and it was Spurs' defence, rather than their vaunted attack, which earned

City Group Seeking Pro Hockey Franchise

A Victoria group is planning to apply for a Western Hockey League franchise for next season on a provisional basis when the annual WHL meeting is held at San Francisco on May 25.

Announcement was made yesterday by John Bassett, 23-year-old Victoria reporter, who is spokesman for the group.

Bassett is the eldest son of John Bassett Jr., publisher of the Toronto Telegram and a member of the board of directors of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Members of the Victoria group seeking the return of professional hockey include professional hockey player Stuart Keate and Courtney Haddock. Several other prominent Victorians, it is reported, will also be involved.

DEPENDS ON LEAFS

Whether or not Victoria has a chance to regain a WHL franchise depends almost entirely on the Toronto Maple Leafs. It is the hope of the Victoria group that the Maple Leafs can be persuaded to make Victoria its No. 1 farm club and provide the 15 players necessary.

The franchise would be owned by the group, which would be responsible for the complete financing and business operation of the club. The Leafs would just provide the players and, it is hoped, the coach.

Bassett said it is not the desire of the group to become involved in any player dealings.

He said the Leafs have 55 players under professional contract and would be able to put a contender club in Victoria if they agreed to the tentative plans submitted by the Victoria group.

Garden Notes

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

WALLFLOWER SEED (J. N. Lady Smith)—You can, if you wish, save the seeds from your wallflowers and sow them to get plants for setting out this fall. The flowers have been blooming for some time now, and it is too late to take any steps to prevent cross-pollination with wallflowers of other colors, so the resulting plants will probably be something of a mishmash.

Leave the seed pods on the plants as late as you dare, until they show signs of splitting, then remove them with a short length of stem. Spread them out on sheets of paper to finish ripening, and when quite crisp and dry, shake out the seeds. If you have a little nursery seedbed or coldframe ready, there is no reason why they shouldn't be sown right away.

HOUSEPLANT CARE (L. D. V. Victoria)—I can understand your reluctance to trust your houseplant collection to your husband's tender care during your two-week stay in hospital. Unless a person has a "feel" for houseplants, almost always they will either drown them with too much water or forget about them altogether.

The ideal solution to your problem would be to get some green-thumbed and understanding neighbor to come in daily to attend to the watering and other care. This isn't as easy as it sounds, though, for folks seem to be extremely reluctant to take on the responsibility for other people's houseplants—in fact, I think neighbors would sooner look after your children than your houseplants. I think they are afraid something might happen to the plants while under their care.

Failing a plant-sitter, I suggest you give each plant a very thorough watering last thing, then seal each one airtight in a plastic bag big enough to take pot and foliage without crowding or rubbing. Keep in a cool but light place, and do NOT use a saucer under the pot within the plastic bag.

This is what happens: Moisture evaporates from the leaves and soil, but sealed up in this way, it condenses as drops of moisture on the sides of the bag. These drops run down to the bottom, where they are absorbed by the clay of the flower pot, and transferred back to the soil. In effect, it is a self-watering device, using the same water over and over.

DELPHINIUM FROM SEED (B. O. N. Duncan). Delphinium seed purchased from a seedsman is often rather disappointing in its percentage of germination, as these seeds go downhill rapidly under ordinary storage conditions, and seeds purchased this spring must have been in storage for at least nine months.

Seeds you gather yourself, around the end of July or in early August, should come up with all the enthusiasm of radishes if sown as soon as gathered. If you prefer to hold them for sowing in the spring, keep in a sealed glass jar or bottle stored in the food compartment of your refrigerator.

WHEN TO LIFT CROCUS (G. W. Victoria). If your clumps of crocus are obviously overcrowded, you'd better dig them up after the foliage has died down naturally, which is usually around the end of June. Dry off in a shaded, airy place, then clean up the bulbs and store in a cool, dry place until autumn. Replant the larger ones where you want the flowers, and set out the little bulbs in rows in the vegetable plot or a nursery bed to plump themselves up to flowering size.

Your colonies of crocus will go for a longer period of time without lifting if you plant a little deeper than normally, setting the bulbs about four inches below the soil surface.

Marion Brando's father and Marion's partner, Walter Seltzer, have been in Paris to talk to Laurence Harvey about starring in the Howard Fast story, The Winston Affair. . . . And British producer David Rose wants Marion to portray Mussolini in his movie biog of the late Italian dictator. "If we can afford him, that is," said Rose cautiously.

So far, while gadding about London and on the continent I hear repeatedly that Marsha Hyer will soon be announcing her engagement to a well-known producer. I believe it will be Marsha's first marriage, if the reports prove true. . . . And I'm wondering how much it will cost Tony Curtis to get a divorce and then marry his Taras leading lady, 17-year-old Christine Kaufmann!

Judy Garland brought a tutor to England for her children while she is her making The Lonely Stage with Dirk Bogarde. She has rented the house overlooking Fashionable Sunningdale golf course which was occupied by Bing Crosby at the tail end of his Road to Hong Kong movie.

Simone Signoret has promised director Bryan Forbes and producer-actor Richard Attenborough to star for them in Seance on a Wet Afternoon.

If Prince Rainier had not been so highhanded three years ago in suspending the Monaco parliament, he would not be in such a bad spot today with the French government. True, the prince has recalled parliament and promised a new constitution, but it might be too late to placate de Gaulle.

Vivien Leigh, who flopped in Australia with her repertoire of plays, is a big hit. I hear, in South America. She has not yet married her leading man. Perhaps she's waiting to see how the marriage of ex-husband Sir Laurence Olivier to Joan Plowright turns out.

Aging Romeo Rex Harrison was positively furious at being torn from the side of new bride Rachel Roberts in England, to fill in as Caesar in Rome while Elizabeth Taylor was recovering again.

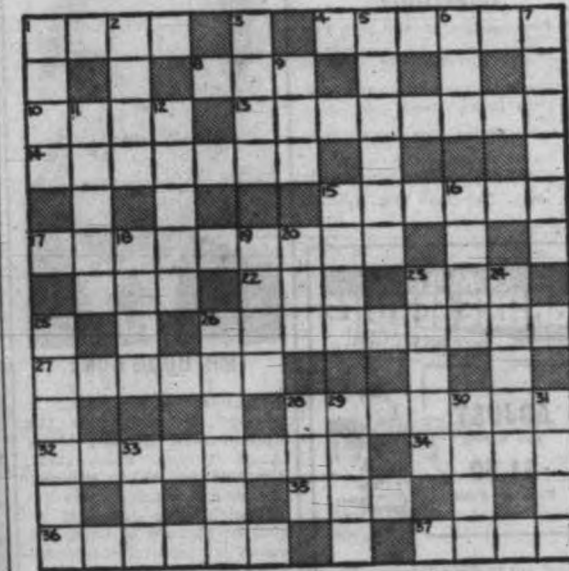

French Film Week At the Gallery

The French Film Committee of Victoria is launching a French Film Week in association with the Art Gallery.

Actually, it is a fairly short week as weeks go — three days, May 14, 15 and 16. Every evening at 8, documentary and other films on French and French-Canadian culture will be shown at the Art Gallery. Some commentaries will be in English.

Public attendance at these showings is invited. A collection will defray expenses.

LET'S TALK

By Rudolf Flesch

I don't know much about music, but I do know that sad music makes me feel sad and gay music makes me feel gay. Up to now I didn't know why.

Now I know—thanks to a fascinating new book, The Language of Music by Reryck Cooke—(Oxford paperback). Mr. Cooke, as far as I know, is the first man who has ever tried to draw up a dictionary of musical expression—a list of musical phrases and the emotions each of them conveys.

He admits that his book is just a starter. He lists 16 "basic terms of musical vocabulary"—16 basic tone combinations that express joy, anguish, sadness, relief, resignation and 11 other distinct, recognizable human emotions. Then—and that's where the fun comes in—he illustrates his 16 items of musical vocabulary with hundreds of examples running from medieval hymns and Johann Sebastian Bach to George Gershwin and Irving Berlin.

Countless Examples

A two-note phrase meaning anguish, for instance (which Mr. Cooke identifies as the minor sixth of the scale falling to the fifth) recurs in the Crucifixus of Bach's B minor Mass; in Mozart's Don Giovanni (Donna Anna's grief at her father's death); in Schubert's Erl King (my father, my father); in Verdi, Mussorgsky, Wagner, Schoenberg and countless other examples.

It was used independently and with identical phrasing in Wagner's Parsifal and in Verdi's Otello. And if you can recall the well-known Russian folk song, Ochi Chornya (Black Eyes), you'll find it there, too.

Another basic phrase meaning joy (a three-note rise to the major third) can also be found in innumerable places. Handel used it in his Messiah (The trumpet shall sound); Mozart in The Magic Flute, Berlioz in the Resurrection chorus in The Damnation of Faust. Bach used it for the Gloria in Excelsis in his Mass in B minor and Beethoven used it for the Gloria in Excelsis in his Missa Solemnis. And Johann Strauss used it for the joyous opening bars of his Blue Danube Waltz.

On Right Track

This isn't the place for going into the ramifications of Mr. Cooke's theory or giving you the details of his evidence for having actually discovered the language of music. But it's impossible to read his book without feeling that he's basically on the right track. Music—at least our Western music—is something like a code and it may well be possible by painstaking work to decipher that code. After all, we know a great deal about the emotions felt by composers when they wrote their pieces and we also know—or could find out—about the emotions evoked in the average listener by the same composition.

Mr. Cooke's book could be the first step toward a scientific study of music. As he says at the end of the book, "Perhaps psychology will have to link hands again with philosophy and metaphysics before the language of music yields up its innermost secrets. However it may be, these must eventually be yielded up, and we should not shrink from them; for man's besetting virtue is curiosity, and his ultimate quest is to discover the truth about himself."

'Boink, Boink' Man Boosts Aussies

A dark-haired man with a neatly-trimmed beard walked up to the Colonist telephone switchboard.

He started wobbling a piece of fibreboard. Accompanied by the rhythmic noises, he sang, "Tie me kangaroo down sport, tie me kangaroo down..."

Two switchboard operators turned in disbelief.

This was Rolf Harris, a 32-year-old entertainer who is making a living singing Australian songs in an Australian accent.

Victoria residents will see him at the Jaycee's Centennial Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition. The fast-rising recording artist will have top billing at the fair, along with other entertainment yet to be announced.

A 24-by-30-inch piece of fibreboard and ingenuity brought fame to the young man who was struggling to become a painter in England.

He wrote his own lyrics and worked as an entertainer to pay his way through art school. He became an accomplished artist and had some of his works displayed in the Royal Academy's summer exhibition in London.

Ironically, it was art which in turn led to his recognition as a vocalist.

Harris was supposed to paint a friend's portrait. He applied some background paint to a piece of brown board but it didn't dry in time.

ROLF HARRIS... and wobble board

"I propped the board over was going to burn. I picked it up to fan it and away it went. It got red hot and I thought it was going to burn. I picked it up to fan it and away it went. The board goes 'boink, boink'."

boink, boink" when Harris holds it by the ends and shakes it rapidly back and forth. It doesn't have to be heated before it will make the noise.

The artist demonstrated the noise to his friend who "wasn't too impressed." Harris finished the portrait, wobbled the board now and again and later used it as a musical instrument, with the face still painted on it.

Harris is a different sort, but he says he's not a Boink. "Boink seems to be an excuse for failure. They all profess to hate conformity but they all conform with each other. Besides, there's no excuse for not keeping clean."

Neither is he searching for a "new sound." He said, "I like to use the board as a background. The wobble is my trademark."

"My main aim in life is to continue writing Australian songs and singing them in an Australian accent. Most of the new records there are phony American accents and phony American situations," he said.

"It seems a shame when the country has its own perfectly good accents the people shouldn't take pride in the Australian accent as such."

"There's a fierce nationalism, yet a fierce embarrassment about the way we speak. This is the way America became famous... by breaking away from England and taking pride in being itself," said Rolf Harris.

To Traffic Problems

Monorail the Answer

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Tacoma engineer says a monorail system is the only answer to metropolitan traffic problems.

Arthur R. Anderson, vice-president of the Concrete Technology Corporation which built the pre-stressed concrete tracks for the 1.5-mile two-track monorail which runs from downtown Seattle to the World's Fair there, said Saturday the cost is not prohibitive.

ONLY $200,000 Here to attend a University of British Columbia seminar, Mr. Anderson said a two-track monorail system costs about $500,000 a mile to build compared with "millions of dollars" a mile for an underground subway.

"It's the only thing for a rapid transit system."

The Seattle monorail now travels at a maximum of 55 miles an hour but could go 90 on a longer straightaway.

TRACKS BOLTED Tracks of the Seattle system are bolted together so when the fair is over it can be taken apart and moved to another location.

"This is a sort of test case," he said. "It's a wonderful opportunity to show the people of Seattle how it works so the people can decide if they want a permanent monorail system."

He said Los Angeles city officials have looked over the Seattle system and are interested in building one to solve their own traffic problems.

HYPEROPIA

Hyperopia or farsightedness is present in more than six out of 10 people. Often in this condition both distant and close objects are seen clearly. The reason for this is that the focusing mechanism in the eye can overcome the defects of farsightedness and produce clear vision. This means that the focusing mechanism must be constantly at work, if clear vision is to be obtained and thus a mechanism that is primarily intended for close work only, is constantly in use in a farsighted person. This constant use often produces fatigue, eyestrain and headaches and frequently tends to make the eyes turn toward each other. When farsightedness is corrected by glasses the focusing mechanism is allowed to relax and assume its normal role and comfortable, efficient vision is again obtained. It is advisable to have your eyes examined at least every two years.

Trade Mission Arrives

More Timber Deals

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 34-man European Common Market timber trade delegation arrived here by air yesterday for a two-week tour of the province's timber manufacturing facilities with a view to increasing the market for B.C. timber.

The delegation, whose tour is sponsored by the provincial government and the B.C. Lumber Manufacturers Association, was met by Trade Minister Bonner, B. M. Hoffmeister, president of the B.C. Council of Forest Industries, and a large group of prominent lumbermen.

EXPANDING TRADE The delegation leader, Dr. J. W. Bakker of Holland, said the purpose of the visit is to explore the possibility of expanding timber trade with B.C. "Our position in the ECM is not as strong as we would like it to be," Mr. Bonner said. "However, we feel that within the next decade this market will rival the United States market."

LUMBER PRICES Mr. Hoffmeister said the tour would provide an opportunity for discussions aimed at a stabilization of prices. One of the major points confusing European buyers of timber was the fluctuation in B.C. lumber prices.

No Candidate Here For Socialist Party

Victoria branch of the Socialist Party of Canada probably will not enter a candidate for the June 18 federal election because "there is not enough money available," a spokesman for the group said yesterday.

The branch's monthly business meeting will be held at 1290 Pike Street at 8 p.m. tomorrow.

The spokesman and literary secretary, 41-year-old J.

George Jenkins, said: "We claim to be the only socialist party in Canada. All other political parties favor varying degrees of welfare state capitalism."

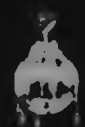

Of his political views, he said "I'm an anti-Communist if you're speaking of Russian capitalism. If by Communist you mean a free society of no bosses and workers, no army, no money, no secret or civil police, no jails, then you can say I'm a Communist."

Many-Splendored Claims for Support

By RAY ARGYLE
Telegram News Service

VANCOUVER — Politicians' election predictions can be many-splendored things, and in the West all parties are making extravagant claims of voter support in what is still a slow-moving campaign.

Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson, for example, predicts up to 100 of his party's candidates winning election June 18.

Tommy Douglas sees "40 or 50" New Democratic supporters in the next parliament... enough to hold the balance of power.

These predictions, made straight-faced and usually reported straight-faced, are normally thrown off during any campaign to catch the voter who wants to be on the winning side.

One party stalwart (who will remain anonymous) told me his party was sure of winning six seats in a certain western province. But he quickly added: "That's off the record, of course. If it's for publication, we're going to win 12!"

The "battle of the predictions" hasn't so far fazed any of the candidates.

Progressive Conservatives, who held 66 of the 72 Western seats in the last parliament, expect just as much success this time out.

Terry Nugent, PC MP for Edmonton — Strathcona, predicted Social Credit will not win a single seat anywhere in Canada, and that the PCs will again take all 17 Alberta seats.

But the thrill of hearing a national leader introduced as "the next prime minister of Canada" always brings the party faithful to their feet.

When Liberal leader Pearson appeared in Victoria recently, he got just this kind of an introduction. Pearson also appeared pleased with the response he got from another line which he will probably use with increasing frequency during the campaign: "The talk I had with the president..." referring to his visit to Washington for a Nobel prize-winners' dinner at the White House.

Pearson was in Victoria to whip up support for ex-navy officer David Groos, one of the half dozen candidates the Liberals are banking on electing in B.C. June 18.

Conservatives took 18 of B.C.'s 22 seats in 1958, the other four going to CCF. With the New Democratic Party the strongest threat to the government on the west coast, Liberals are campaigning as the "only alternative" to the PCs.

The only test the PC government has had west of the Rockies since 1958 was the 1961 by-election in Esquimalt-Saanich where Liberal Groos came within 545 votes of capturing the seat formerly held by George Pearkes, PC George Chatterton, who retained the seat for the 50-50 chance of winning again.

Liberals also figure to take at least three Vancouver area seats from the government. They're counting on electing former provincial leader Arthur Laid in Ernest Broome's South Vancouver riding, J. R. Nicholson in Vancouver Centre, where Chinese-Canadian Douglas Jung is in trouble; and Rhodes scholar economist John Davies in Bill Payne's riding of Coast-Capilano.

External Affairs Minister Greene in Vancouver, Quadra and Justice Minister Fulton in Kamloops are considered shoe-ins.

Also expected to win re-election handily are the four former CCF MPs. They are strongman Harold Winch in Vancouver East, divorce crusader Frank Howard in Skeena, veteran H. W. Herdige in Kootenay West and Erhart Regier in Burnaby-Coquitlam.

New Democrats expect to elect at least another half-dozen members. Their brightest hopes are pinned on Vancouver newspaper columnist Barry Mather who is running in New Westminster; Robert Prittle in Burnaby-Richmond (the NDP controls all provincial seats in the riding); firebrand Colin Cameron in Nanaimo; and former provincial leader and No. 1 vote getter in civic politics, Arnold Webster in Vancouver-Kingsway.

A seat all parties regard as up for grabs is the Vancouver Island riding of Comox-Alberni where former CCFer William Moore, mayor of Courtenay, is running for the Liberals against the PC's H. McQuillan.

Social Credit delayed nominating most of its candidates until this week but the party plans a whirlwind campaign promoting the need for Soerens members in parliament to protect B.C.'s interests at Ottawa.

Social Credit is expected to pick up Tory votes—if not seats—and Liberals and NDP candidates hope to pick off several seats with the help of the Soerens.

All through the West, foreign trade and the Common Market have turned up as issues of surprising importance.

Conservatives have maintained much of their prairie farm support as a result of the China grain sales and the success of Agriculture Minister Hamilton's appeal for orderly marketing of beef cattle.

Prices, instead of falling as expected, actually rose.

British Columbia, which sells 70 per cent of its manufactures to foreign markets—and almost all of its fish, lumber and aluminum overseas—is especially dependent on foreign trade.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker believes he has won western support as a result of his lobbying with London on the need for Commonwealth trade protection when Britain enters the European Common Market. Liberals in the west say the PM has been fighting a lost cause and should instead be concentrating on the adjustments in trade patterns that Canada will have to develop to offset United Kingdom trade losses.

Newspaper support for the parties in the west is confined to the Liberals and PCs with Liberals having the edge in this department. Only three of Western Canada's 10 leading dailies have declared in support of the Conservatives.

The Vancouver Sun, which supported the Conservatives in 1957 and 1958, announced it would support the Liberals again in this election because

... in trouble

"the Conservative promise has proved only a disappointment."

At this stage of the campaign, Liberals and New Democrats look as if they can each win about 15 seats in the west, which would still give the PCs 42 western seats.

New Democrats could raise their B.C. representation from four to six or seven, add perhaps two seats in Saskatchewan, and four to six in Manitoba. Liberals could win half a dozen in B.C. and two or three in each of the prairie provinces, plus the Mackenzie River riding in the North West Territories.

Social Credit, even with a substantial pick-up in votes, could still be blanked in the fight for House seats.

DAVID GROOS

If this happens, Liberals would have to hold Conservatives to no more than 90 seats in the east to bring down the government. PCs won 142 of the 193 Eastern Canada seats in 1958.

A tight race in the east could thus bring Canada's political parties to their "moment of truth" on the western prairies or even the valleys of B.C. when the votes are counted election night.

Navy Warning:

Finders of Bombs Should Call Police

The finding of three practice aerial bombs and a live hand grenade in the Greater Victoria area in recent days has resulted in the navy warning people to call the police in such cases.

Navy demolition teams disposed of all the weapons.

Ambulance Secretary Here Soon

Next meeting of the retired group of St. John Ambulance Association will be held at 3 p.m. Wednesday in the home of Mrs. Maurice Destrube at Elk Lake.

Brig. P. A. Johnston, secretary of the Priory of St. John in Ottawa, wishes to meet the group at this time.

Also present will be Lord and Lady Rodney, now farming in the Sooke District. Lady Rodney will tell the group of a croche she started recently.

Girls' Tunics Accepted By Students

VANCOUVER (CP) — The tunic uniform has been voluntarily accepted by half the 600 girls at Lord Byng High School, school officials said Saturday.

Some of the girl students at other high schools also were reported to have adopted the grey, box-pleated tunic.

Three students were reported to have started the trend. A high school girl was recently sent home for refusal to change her short skirt and her "rat's nest" hair style.

It was not known where the grenade came from but it is believed the bombs washed ashore from a U.S. naval exercise in a practice firing area in the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

WAS LOADED

The fragmentation type grenade found by a youngster in bushes near Millstream School was loaded but not primed. It could have killed a number of people up to 100 feet away if it had been banged or heated, said a navy spokesman.

All three of the practice bombs were considered harmless, although one found on a beach at Clover Point on Tuesday and carried to a person's home had a small charge in its nose.

STAY AWAY

Persons finding any type of weapon which could be harmful should stay away from the object and telephone the police, who in turn will notify the navy's demolition unit, the navy spokesman said.

Q. While putting my car away the other evening in my garage, which is at the end of my lot I found traces of juveniles having been smoking there. I got to wondering, if my garage burnt down would my house insurance cover my loss?

—D. K., Mill Bay.

A. YES. An outbuilding on your premises would be covered under the 10% extension clause. You are obligated to report any knowledge you have of the cause to the proper authorities.

Dormant Volcanoes to Erupt Again

By RUSSELL ELMAN

OTTAWA (CP) — A prominent Canadian geologist says dormant volcanoes in northern British Columbia are due to erupt—but it's anyone's guess when.

Dr. James M. Harrison, chief of the Geological Survey of Canada, considers it "a good bet" that Canada's only known active volcanic region—the Telegraph Creek area of northern B.C.—will erupt again.

"Whether it will be in our lifetime, we don't know," he said in an interview. "However, there is no scientific reason to suppose that there will not be more volcanic activity."

Dr. Harrison said the last known volcanic eruption in Canada is thought to have occurred about 200 to 300 years ago near Telegraph Creek, 600 miles northwest of Vancouver. "New knowledge of this volcanic region has been recently revealed through extended geological mapping and aerial photography," he said.

Canada has geologically a complete record of volcanic activity as any country in the world but in the past there had been no serious attempt to investigate Canada's volcanic history.

Mount Royal, the 900-foot-high wooded park dominating Montreal, was an ancient volcano which blew its top 300,000,000 years ago. Much of the Maritimes, the Gaspé peninsula and Laurentian hills were once volcanic areas of an even older vintage. Chances of a volcanic revival in these regions were considered negligible.

Vatican Needs Recruits

By FRANK HAARHOFF

Telegram News Service

For the first time, the Vatican's Swiss Guard, the world's only "army" that has not been engaged in a war or even a skirmish since 1527, has acute recruiting difficulties despite its relatively safe existence.

Through advertisements in Swiss newspapers, commander Dr. Robert Nuenlist has urged young Swiss Roman Catholic men to enlist. Conditions: they must not be older than 25 years, must have completed their military training and must be willing to serve for at least two years. The commander is looking for 25 men.

At present, the Swiss Guard consists of only 74 soldiers, 5 officers and one priest. Reasons given for the apparent lack of enthusiasm to join the Guard are the low pay (about $115 a month) and the fact that the young soldiers may not marry.

Dr. Nuenlist, whose salary is said to be about $350 keeps his men in shipshape and up to date as far as theoretical military training is concerned, although their weapons (never shown to the public)—machine-guns, rifles and pistols—are not exactly up to date. But they have never used them anyway, because, dressed in a medieval, yellow, orange and blue uniform, the young soldiers stand on guard with pikes.

Their uniform had altered considerably through the centuries. And it had become rather ugly. In 1914, however, the present-day distinguished, colorful garb was provided for them. It is an exact reproduction of the uniform worn more than three-hundred years ago. It was designed by Michelangelo.

Pope Pius II founded the Swiss Guard in 1506 when he hired 150 Swiss pikemen under their leader Peter von Hertenstein. Twenty-one years later, on May 6, 1527, they fought the first and last battle in the history of the Guard.

This year, 435 years after the heroic fight, commander Nuenlist hopes to be able to give his troop more strength by applying modern promotion methods.

Dining Out or Grabbing a Bite Middle Man Makes Difference

Fifty per cent of the pleasure in dining out is provided by the service of garçons, camerieres, keller or—to use a feeble word for these tray artists—waiters.

It is the difference between a cheese sandwich plunked down in front of you and a tongue-enchanting tournee ceremoniously served—no, better—elaborated onto the table.

Item: Friends took me to one of Brussels' finest restaurants several years ago. With an inimitable flourish, the maitre d'hotel entrusted the three of us with map-sized menus. He retreated silently. He timed the moment when we had made our selections and appeared out of nowhere. My friends were connoisseurs of eating, and I was quickly learning.

Our order consisted of approximately 23 different meats, vegetables, fruits and variations of listed dishes. The maitre listened attentively, without making notes.

Then one of my friends, a Belgian tourist official, said: "I'll show you just how good these garçons are."

With this, he snapped his fingers lightly. A garçon arrived from a doorway.

"Please tell us what we ordered," my friend said. Without flinching an eyelid to the request, our table waiter—who had not taken the order—repeated in a machine-gun spatter of French what we had ordered from the menu. He didn't make a mistake or leave anything out.

This only a minute after the maitre had taken our request.

almost a year. I returned to my favorite low-priced restaurant in Mannheim, Germany.

The waitress, who was still working there, rushed back to the kitchen and came back with the owner, who was his own chef. He was an enormous, apple-cheeked man.

"Welcome back," he beamed. "Are we having Sauerbraten mit Knodeln again (sour roast with potato dumplings)?"

I nodded, feeling at home again. Five minutes later, the sauerbraten arrived, and with it a glass of my favorite white wine from Baden.

"But," I started protesting. "Compliments of the chef," said the waitress. And after the meal, I had to tell her how I had liked my travel abroad.

Item: When I was in Paris, an art gallery owner, whose acquaintance I had struck up accidentally, invited me to come along to the Quartier Latin.

We walked into what at first appeared as a dingy old greasy spoon. Directly behind the door sat an immense wooden stove with pots and pans steaming.

Over it seated the 250-pound hulk of Madame, who owned the restaurant. "Ah, mon petit Gaston," she cried, flinging her arms around my friend and planting two loud kisses on his cheeks. "You naughty boy, you haven't been here for three days."

My friend returned the welcome. I got away with a sticky handshake. Lifting one lid after the other, my friend peered into the pots, mulling his order to Madame. I complied in the same way.

We were served by a dainty young waitress who actually performed a curtsy after we tipped her a voluntary ten per cent of the fare.

Sometimes it is more important how you are served than what the food tastes like. Eating habits determine the quality of the service.

In France, eating is dining, and dining is a two to three hour affair with long intervals. Serving food has become a ritual, and patrons show their appreciation by tipping heavily.

In Italy, eating is not as long drawn out, but camerieres charm you with a volley of their patented Romanic courtesies.

Item: In Germany, eating is labor, and means filling your stomach beyond capacity with heavy foods, to the tune of efficient keller which vary from international perfection to rawboned indignation should you be as audacious as to order a dish they don't approve of.

In England, eating means facing two choices—plush restaurants as good as any, where else or eateries where steak tastes like potatoes like peas like carrots. It's a mere question of your pocketbook whether you get commendable service.

In Western Canada, eating is either bare surviving or feasting, from the standpoint of service.

The service in coffee shops is non-existent as to courtesy, but with more and more exceptions noticeable. And the service in restaurants can compare with some of the best in Europe.

What strikes me, though, is the fact most waitresses in coffee shops seem to have been born without the power of speech.

Why? Why? Eating is also talking, and an occasional word from the waitress would make the fish and chips all the more palatable.

But why must I ask the impossible?

ated with them. It is possible that a comprehensive study of these materials and their relation to mineral deposits will provide important clues that will enable us to find other deposits that now are unsuspected."

The University of Manitoba, he said, is preparing a study of volcanic rocks on the edge of the pre-Cambrian Canadian shield, which contains half of Canada's known metallic wealth.

New English 'Gamekeepers' Reaping a Belated Fortune

By DOUG MARSHALL
LONDON (CP)—When the 1960 Betting and Gaming Act opened a legal right of way for the casino card game, club managers and entrepreneurs were slow to climb aboard the gambling gravy train. Now the compartments are crowded.

London already has between 30 and 50 legal gambling clubs—nobody is certain of the number—and casinos are being constructed around the coast from Brighton to the Isle of Man.

The new act allows any club to run a gaming table provided play is restricted to members and their guests, that every player has an equal chance and that the club does not take a cut of the winnings.

This last stipulation stymied the gambling operators at first. Then somebody hit on the idea of charging players anything from £1.50 to £20 for the right to sit down and play for a single session.

A session of chess usually lasts 30 minutes and involves nine players. With two tables going for six hours a night at an average charge of £5 a head, a well-run club can clear more than £7,000 a week over and above initial subscription fees.

The operators then invented a new form of roulette—called roulette—which works on the same principle and eliminates the house's zero slot. Most clubs also cater for high-stake bridge and poker sessions on the side.

Before the gambling clubs became legal, private gaming parties with astronomical stakes were the talk of the limousine set in London's Mayfair district. One peer is reported to have lost £41,000 on a single draw of the cards and £150,000 in a week.

The first legal club opened in Berkeley Square but went broke because the managers were too generous with their credit. Some of the pillars of Britain's establishment displayed an alarming and un-English reluctance to honor their card debts.

The new clubs keep the stakes comparatively low and the credit limited to what they know they and their members can afford. The gambler is protected from losing his shirt and this means more players and a bigger profit for the operators.

But there still are a surprising number of people who can cheerfully lose £500 or £1,000 in one night. Most of them, reports say, are foreigners. Only about 30 per cent are English-born and include anything from actor-managers and surgeons to car salesmen and saplings of the nobility who control their parents' fortunes to avoid death duties.

The best clubs use continental cards and equipment and employ French croupiers, lured away from Biarritz, Le Touquet, Deauville, Cannes and Monte Carlo with salary offers of more than £4,000 a year.

Britain's sudden gambling fever has imposed severe strains on the resources of French firms manufacturing equipment. Until a British plastics firm entered the business this year, there was a delay of chips are down.

three months in delivery of casino and club chips.

The supply of trained croupiers is also running short but millionaire industrialist Harold Potter found the answer to that.

He advertised casually for men between 25 and 35 to train as croupiers for his £100,000 casino opening soon in Brighton and had 600 applicants on his hands before he could spin a fortune wheel.

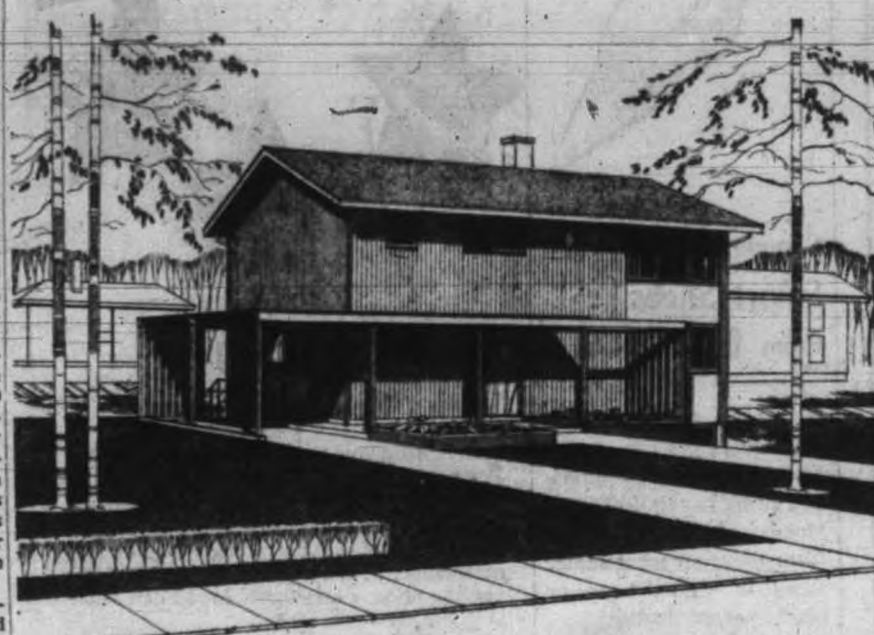

He says many of them are teachers, bank clerks and insurance workers seeking glamour and adventure. Englishmen, he believes, have gambling blood in their veins and in their element when the Building Values Lagging

Value of building permits were down in Oak Bay and Saanich during the first four months of the year due to the absence of large building projects.

In Saanich 364 permits worth $2,575,229 were issued in the four-month period compared with 379 permits in 1961 worth $3,164,468. In Oak Bay the 1961 permit revenue, which included two apartment buildings, stood at $1,019,806 for 140 permits compared with this year's 140 permits valued at $723,578.

In Saanich 161 building permits worth $710,219 were issued in April. Oak Bay issued 49 permits worth $223,581.

Two-Storey House Hard to Beat

Where space must go hand in hand with economy, the two-storey house is still hard to beat. Koyander and Wright, Vancouver architects, designed this house for a large family. Four bedrooms and the main bathroom occupy the second floor with a dressing room off the master bedroom. Even the carport has been worked into the function of the house. It protects the side entrance and a convenient outdoor storage room as well as the entire walk from the carport to the main entrance. A washroom is located off the attractive entrance hall along with a closet for coats. The large living room is lighted from front and back and both the living room and dining room have access to the patio. The kitchen-family room arrangement and the outside entrance to the basement are other large-family considerations. Working drawings for this house, known as Design 608, are available from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at minimum cost.

Pour Out Your House From Shipping Crate

By BEVERLY BEYETTE
Copley News Service

CORONADO, Calif.—When they roll out the barrel one of these days, there may be a house inside.

This is one of the predictions from the plastics industry, which foresees a time when all the raw materials for a house (plastic, of course) can be shipped anywhere in a barrel.

The raw materials, when removed from the barrel will expand and be foamed into place to make what the industry terms "a serviceable structure."

A house-in-a-barrel is only one of the things to come in plastic, according to William T. Cruise of New York, N.Y., vice-president of the Society of Plastics Industries.

The plastics people are predicting a record consumption of plastic this year.

It means you may be able to cut down those heating and air conditioning bills, for the industry sees dry wall building structure as one of the big futures for plastic.

This foam insulation, which will be used as a "sandwich" filling between sheets of plywood, aluminum or stainless steel, is expected to improve insulation greatly.

It's even a possibility, say the plastic experts, that electrical heating circuits will eventually be imbedded in the foam walls and eliminate the need for central heating.

The housewife has been heard in the plastic industry, as well as every other industry, and here's one result:

Tool companies are demanding decorative plastic handles for tool sets so they can be kept in the kitchen instead of in the garage.

New lighting techniques which may be made possible through improvements in plastic include black light, light in pattern and wall-to-wall ceiling lighting.

One of these techniques is very tricky. Says Cruise, "If the housewife wants to introduce a romantic mood, she can set the rheostat so that the lights gradually grow dim."

The plastics association, which has members in all countries of the free world, sent a delegation to Russia two years ago. They found: A well-developed plastics industry, directed to military and industrial needs. Explains Cruise, "The creature comforts are way down the line. They're not too interested in whether the housewife has a well-appointed home."

Job Seekers Down to 3,560

The Victoria National Employment Service office placed 813 applicants in jobs during April, it said Friday. This figure, together with applicants who found jobs for themselves, brought the number of job seekers registered down to 3,560.

This total is 1,282 lower than the total at the end of April last year.

Safe Diving

A Hole in the Pioneer Image

By CAL SMITH

As the author of a skin-diving column, with hundreds of hours experience in the water and a navy diving course to my credit, I finally come to realize that no matter what I do, I will never qualify as an expert.

I lack two things, either of which would be an almost certain guarantee of membership in the exclusive fraternity. The first, a home-made diving helmet supplied with a bicycle pump, would prove that I had been interested in diving since childhood and had been curious and venturesome enough to risk my life trying to learn more about it. The second, a hard hat diving rig, would show that I had been diving since the "old days" and was a diving pioneer.

I really wish I owned one or both of these items, but the truth of the matter is that, as a child, I was content to dog-paddle around in the shallows like the rest of my friends. Oh, I suppose I did venture into deeper water once in a while; but when I did, it was while riding securely on an inflated inner tube. And even if I had been venturesome enough to try diving with a home-made breathing apparatus, I'm quite sure I wouldn't have known how to construct one.

My leanings towards underwater experimentation ended when I tried ducking my head in the bathtub and breathing out of a drinking straw. Even this wasn't an original idea; I was stealing from Moses. When it didn't work, I forgot the whole thing and went back to chasing little girls.

As far as being a diver in the old days, by the time I became interested in the sport, Capt. Cousteau was almost too old to dive any more.

To make things worse, I've never even been attacked by a denizen of the deep. I haven't had to cut myself free of octopus or squid tentacles, fight off attacking sharks, or out-swim killer whales. I've met most of these so-called villains but I guess I'm just unlucky... with scars, I might be able to qualify.

ALEX JAMES TRIES TINY RACER FOR SIZE.

The Car Corner

Busy Beavers' Beast Built to Burn Road

By J. T. JONES

Picture a chap sitting in a very short automobile, his feet on the left front wheel well, the engine against his right leg, an exhaust pipe looped across his lap, a drive shaft spinning about six inches from his right pants pocket and a fuel tank where he could stretch his right shoulder and almost touch it.

Got all that in your mind's eye? Then we might as well identify the chap—he's Alex James, now in the late stages of building the car considered in a city garage.

It's not a very practical vehicle—all it's meant to be is fast. Whether it succeeds at that is still unproved.

A few races in the Northwest Conference this season should decide the issue.

The car (Built by Beavers—Goes Like a Dam) is a sort of unco-ordinated effort. It was started by Doug Beer, who designed the basic layout and the intricate frame of various sized steel tubing. Early construction was executed by Pete Cahill, and very neatly, too.

After a change of plans left the car without a father, James took it over.

The racing class most interesting to the limited-budget types appears to be H Modified—two-seater lightweights with engines of less than 850 cc. displacement, and few other restrictions.

The James car is powered by small Austin four, bored out to 850 cc., with a Sebring Sprite camshaft, large valves (the intakes are from a Ford 60) two carburetors and an electronically balanced crankshaft. Good for about 7,500 and possibly 8,000 rpm, James hopes, and perhaps 48-horsepower.

The transmission, a four-speed Flat 600 unit, is behind the rear axle, and suspension back there is by two angled arms and coil springs. The geometry is indescribable, but on Flats it works fine.

Front suspension is Beer-designed and Cahill-built, using some Flat 300 components as a kind of afterthought. They say four men went crazy before it was perfected, and who knows if it's perfected yet?

Its layout is quite conventional—upper and lower wishbones with coil springs and tubular shock absorbers—but the fabricated parts are made of slim tubing, notoriously difficult to weld without warping.

Radiator is half of a Ford core, with a small separate header tank. Firewall and belly pan are aluminum alloy.

The driver's seat is a thin fibreglass bucket that holds the pilot in a semi-reclining posture to keep his head well down. The passenger's seat had yet to be installed, but because of various machinery in that area, the passenger will have to part with his right leg before he'll be comfortable.

Over the whole works is a light fibreglass body that is homely, to put it politely, but should penetrate the air with very little fuss.

Total weight is still unmeasured, but by estimating the various parts, we arrive at a figure of about 450 pounds, and following Chapman's Law ("A racing car weighs 300 pounds more than the sum of its components") we get a total of 750 pounds, which sounds reasonable—and also promising.

Farmers Face Shortage

WINNIPEG (CP)—The Free Press Weekly Prairie Farmer says Canadian livestock owners and poultry raisers are facing a potential 116,000,000-bushel feed grain shortage.

The nationally distributed weekly says farmers will need to increase their oats and barley acreages to 18,508,000 acres this year from the 14,225,000 acres planted in 1961 to avert the disparity, an increase of about 30 per cent.

OATH, BARLEY
A general recommendation made last week by one crop authority was that farmers take 1,000,000 acres out of planned spring wheat planting and use the land for production of oats and barley.

The paper says farmers now are expected to cut their oats and barley acreages in favor of spring wheat, which is a good dry area crop in the expectation of a strong wheat market this year.

PRODUCTION
Oats production this year has been estimated at 408,800,000 bushels and barley production is estimated at 151,500,000.

For 3,000 Carpenters

Union Contract Talks Expected to Speed Up

A speedup is expected in contract negotiations for 3,000 B.C. carpenters, a union representative said here yesterday.

E. T. Staley, secretary of the provincial council of carpenters which is acting on behalf of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, said he has received notification there will be no consultation board in the dispute.

Time will be saved in the negotiations without a consultation board because both sides agree that "a reshuffle of what has been said in negotiations would serve no purpose," he said.

Conciliation officer George Carmichael, who is familiar with the situation, can now continue trying to get agreement between the two parties, said Mr. Staley.

Victoria carpenters are now in the middle of a two-year contract. Current bargaining is between other unions in the province and the Amalgamated Contractors' Association, B.C. Heavy and Highway Construction Association and General Contractors' Association.

These negotiations normally set the pattern for about 200 independent contractors in the province who employ up to 3,000 carpenters.

More Room to Stay

Heavy Tourist Season on Hand

More visitors than ever before—and more places for them to stay when they get here.

This is how Vancouver Island's motel and hotel operators interviewed yesterday see the 1962 summer tourist season.

Advance bookings for June, July and August are running well ahead of last year's levels, they say, but it is hoped few visitors will actually be unable to find a place to sleep when they get here.

Looking at the onslaught of visitors to come, two things about the 1962 season have emerged as unique.

In the first place, physical volume of tourists is expected to reach unprecedented levels this year and the hotel men are looking to the Island's new accommodation centre to provide the adequate reservations system so urgently required.

Just as important, they add, is the fact this year's season will be much longer than ever before.

What is usually a two-month season will likely be stretched to almost four months by the thousands of visitors pouring into Seattle for the world's fair.

Windstorm Blamed For Fatal Accident

Wind was named yesterday as the cause of the accidental traffic death of a city restaurant operator during a storm here April 27.

Coroner Dr. J. H. Moore, who conducted an inquiry into the death of Tyrone Lam, 1826 1/2 Government, said it was a case of accidental death caused when a windstorm blew Mr. Lam's small rear-engine car out of control near the Thetis Lake turnoff.

The car was literally blown out of control and the force of its forward motion slammed it into a rock wall, he said.

Colorful Part Of City Doomed?

A colorful part of Victoria's downtown lighting system is doomed unless city electrical experts and the Chamber of Commerce can pull a plan out of the hat this week.

The facelifting program which calls for the removal of a forest of tall wooden power poles from the downtown area has lowered the boom on some 90 strings of colored lights which will come down unless another way can be found to hang them.

FOR YEAR ONLY

Chamber of Commerce secretary-manager John Coppinger sees the question as a problem in economics. The lights were hung—for one year only—back in 1937 to mark the coronation of King George VI.

Now, more than 20 years later, the strings of bulbs are in such a state of disrepair it would be wiser to replace them than have them repaired.

DETRACT MORE

On May 11, Mr. Coppinger said, the chamber's retail merchants' group will meet and try to shed some light on the problem. They'll hear a talk by Ken Reid of the city light department.

Ald. Geoffrey Edgewood suggested the dangling wires and their bulbs detract more from the daytime scenery than they add to the evening color.

MUST BE MET

"This is a question of changing to conform with the times," Ald. Edgewood said. "The demands of our modernization program must be met, but I suggest there would be no better time than the present to take stock of our entire approach to decorative lighting."

SOMETHING BETTER

The alderman said he wasn't sorry to see the mouldering wires come down—but wants something better in their place.

"Why drape a lot of lights across the streets? Why not start a program among the owners of the downtown buildings to provide modern lighting across the whole front of the structures?"

"Now that would really be something to see."

Talk on Monday

Horace Dawson, principal of Colquitz Junior High School, will speak at a meeting of the Douglas Rotary Club at 6 p.m. Monday in Holyrood House.

Ship 'Strike' Ends Ailing Mate Gone

Rich Williams, checking the crowd at an Indian show at the Memorial Arena. (He lives with his wife Margaret Ellen at 721 Robleda Crescent. His hobbies are helping the crippled children and cerebral palsy fund and gardening.) Larry Hunt and Doug Caldwell building a hot dog stand. Dick Froudford and Trevor Barlow putting up a barn. Ken Kidd and Reg Owens watching work progress. Hank Taylor missing a work party. Tony Angus pushing Jaycee fair ticket sales. Eric Charman praying the weather will stay good.

A two-day "strike" ended late yesterday when the British freighter Huntsland sailed from Victoria with 20 seamen who left the ship in Vancouver.

The men, who charged First Mate Jan Beeman with mistreatment, agreed to return after a meeting with Capt. Jack Gardiner in the office of the ship's Victoria agents, King Bros. Ltd., yesterday afternoon.

However, Beeman—whose removal from the ship was a condition of the sailors' return—was not aboard when the Huntsland sailed at 6.30 p.m.

A spokesman for the ship's agents said the first mate was sick and had been paid off.

Nature of his illness was not disclosed but Beeman was reported to be "under observation" in Veterans' Hospital. The ship returns to England via India. During the latter stages of the dispute the Huntsland was anchored in Royal Roads.

Rear Admiral Retires In Ottawa

Rear Admiral Rupert Wright, formerly of Victoria, has retired as navy comptroller at RCN headquarters in Ottawa. Effective July, the navy announced yesterday, he will be succeeded by Commodore Charles Joseph Dillon, 50, who becomes a rear admiral and a member of the naval board.

Cake Really Rich

Butlers Tuck In At Grand Reunion

The old and new generations rubbed elbows, ate turkey and nibbled slices from a huge centennial cake during a reunion of some 175 members of the Butler family last night.

FUN FOR ALL

For the older folk of the pioneer family it was a time to reminisce, comment on each other's children, look at old family portraits which hung around the Saanichton Agricultural Hall and generally get caught up on what had been going on.

For the youngsters it was a time for games of tag both inside the hall and out, a chance to sneak the odd piece of cake or cookie and enjoy themselves.

TWO YEARS AGO

Plans to bring relatives of pioneer Saanich Capt. George Stephen Butler together to celebrate the 100th anniversary of his landing on Vancouver Island were put in motion nearly two years ago.

Relatives from as far east as Ontario and as far south as California, from Alberta, the B.C. mainland, up-Island and Victoria, Saanich and Central Saanich attended.

DOLLARS SOLD

A huge cake, covered with centennial dollars was first sliced by Mrs. May Butler Ludlow, 88, oldest surviving member of the original Butler family who with her sister, Gladys Arabella Catherine Butler

Gabb, sat in the place of honor during the banquet.

Centennial dollars from the cake were later stamped with the initial B and sold to members of the family as souvenirs of the reunion.

'Hotel' Docks Tuesday

The Panamanian cruise ship Yarmouth carrying about 200 passengers is expected to berth at Ogden Point docks at 8 a.m. Tuesday.

All passengers will make their way by ferry to Seattle. The Yarmouth is to sail two hours after arrival for Seattle where she will become a floating hotel for four nights while passengers visit the world's fair.

On the return trip the cruise ship is scheduled to dock in Victoria at about 6 p.m. and sail again for San Francisco at 8 p.m. The Yarmouth will make 17 round trips between the two ports during the summer season.

Operators of the cruise schedule hit upon the plan to circumvent a strict American law which prevents foreign-flag vessels from operating between U.S. ports.

Selecting 62 paintings to make up 12th annual Vancouver Island jury exhibition yesterday occupied judges Miss Grace Melvin, Vancouver; E. B. Thomas, Seattle, and Sam Black, Vancouver. Entries were culled from 214 submissions for show which starts Thursday evening in Art Gallery of Greater Victoria.—(Ian Street photo.)

Art Entries Picked For Island Show

Sixty-two out of a total 214 entries were selected yesterday for the 12th annual Vancouver Island jury show at the art gallery of Greater Victoria.

The selected works—paintings, prints, drawings and three pieces of sculpture, representing abstract and realistic schools in about equal proportions—will be shown in the gallery's new wing May 8 to May 27.

They represent the work of professional and amateur artists from many parts of Vancouver Island, and the Gulf Islands. Winners of two cash prizes and eight honorable mention awards were also selected yesterday but won't be announced until formal opening of the jury show at 8.30 p.m. Thursday.

The jury which made the selections: Miss Grace Melvin, painter and former head of the design department at the Vancouver School of Art; Edward Thomas, assistant director of the Seattle Art Museum; Sam Black, painter and lecturer at UBC.

Gallery curator Colin Graham said the standard of this year's show is lower than previous years because of the new ruling that each artist submit only one work for selection by the jury.

Mr. Graham said the experimental four-day showing of all entries in the jury show, held last week, was received with great interest. A total of 700 people attended.

For those who submitted paintings that failed to catch the eye of jury members, there'll be an opportunity to learn where they fell short of standards set for the exhibition.

A panel of experts will discuss what critics look for in judging a jury exhibition at the gallery May 22 at 8.30 p.m. Gallery members will be admitted free.

John D Here May 29

Plans are on hand for staging the biggest political rally in Victoria's history, when Prime Minister Diefenbaker speaks at Memorial Arena May 29.

The Progressive Conservative leader's visit to Victoria was confirmed last night by A. DeB. McPhillips and George Chatterton, Tory candidates for Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich ridings.

"We are making plans for Vancouver Island's largest political rally and there is no doubt, from the initial reaction in this area, Victoria will be repeating the performance of 1957 when the Prime Minister last spoke in the city," said Mr. McPhillips.

On May 21, 1957, 4,000 persons jammed Memorial Arena to hear Mr. Diefenbaker's blistering attack on the Liberals and his "northern vision" message.

System Wrong For City

A city alderman's suggestion that police and fire departments should merge as an economy measure failed to find backing in Esquimalt, where a merged public safety force has been in existence a number of years.

While declining comment on the budget-cutting suggestion of city Ald. Geoffrey Edgewood, Esquimalt reeve A. C. Wurtele said a merged force had worked in his municipality because of circumstances "peculiar to Esquimalt."

"We have an agreement with the navy fire department which works out quite well," said the reeve.

Indian Show Draws 650

Traditional dances and chants of West Coast Indian tribes failed to draw much of an audience in a two-night stand at Memorial Arena.

Fewer than 650 people showed up for the three performances of "West Coast Echoes," directed and narrated by prominent Indian artist George Clutesi and sponsored jointly by businessman R. M. Williams and the Eagles Club. The proceeds of the show will aid the cerebral palsy and crippled children's funds.

Training Saved Life

Skill in a Crisis

There were enough simulated woundings, fractures and disasters strewn on the floor of Central Junior High School's auditorium yesterday afternoon to last one accident-prone community for a decade.

About 50 teams of first-aiders scrambled to give emergency treatment to "patients" with make-believe fractures, bumps on the head and purple complexion under the scrutiny of half a dozen judges.

Occasion for all the activity was the St. John Ambulance Brigade's 19th annual field day—designed to give serious first-aid students a test of their skill under simulated emergency conditions.

Each year, more than 200 Victorians devote many hours of their time—and a good deal of their money—to acquiring a knowledge of first aid. What good is it?

Let some of the men and women who participated in the field day speak for themselves. Not long after he had first become interested in first aid, Ed Thomas, 3878 Hobbs, was driving his truck home at the end of a day's work.

Across the road, he saw a group of young people thrashing frantically around in a water-filled excavation. As he stopped the truck and dashed for the scene, someone fished out the body of a little girl.

"I'll never forget it," said Mr. Thomas. "I was sure she was dead."

It was here his first aid training took over. He applied artificial respiration for 20 minutes and—by the time an ambulance arrived—the spark of life was glowing again.

Shortly afterward, with the youngster well on the road to recovery, Mr. Thomas received word from a grateful doctor that his emergency first aid had saved the little girl's life.

Lorraine Jones, a Victoria College junior, began her first aid training about two years ago and recently put it to use.

Miss Jones' mother unwittingly grabbed a razor blade, seriously slashing her hand. "Without the training, we'd all have had hysterics," said Miss Jones.

And it's probably safe to say that a lot of other people in future years will live to thank the earnest bandagers who believe that, sooner or later, an emergency will come—and who want to be ready when it does.

Girls' Drill Corps Forms Honor Guard

A profusion of spring flowers decorated Metropolitan United Church for the wedding of Miss Norma Dell Cameron and Mr. Leslie Francis Harmaworth Saturday evening.

Pews were marked with white bows and spring flowers. When the couple left the church they passed through a guard of honor formed by the Victoria Girls' Drill Corps, of which the bride was a member.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Norman W. Cameron, 1713 17th Avenue S.W., Calgary, Alta., and Mr. and Mrs. L. Harmaworth, 780 Lily Avenue.

The bride chose a period gown of pearl white silk faille. The bodice, re-embroidered with cut-out lace flowers, featured a deep oval neckline and long sleeves. The full skirt, slightly en train, had a draped, stiffened front with a faille bow and the panelled front was outlined with lace flowers. Her three-tiered chapel-length veil was held by a coronet of seed pearls, crystals and diamonds. She carried mauve lilies and lily-of-the-valley.

Preceding the bride to the altar were her trio of attendants, matron of honor, Mrs. H. Pillar; bridesmaid, Mrs. C. Cameron; and bridesmaid, Miss Suzanne Bytrey. Identically gowned in floor-length dresses of polished cotton in a turquoise and blue print. The sleeveless gowns were styled with curved necklines and V-neckline at back. They wore hats of veiling and flowers en tone.

Flower girl, Leanne Cameron, bride's niece, wore a short white full-skirted frock with cummerbund and turquoise flowers in her hair.

Mr. David Jackson was best man and Mr. H. Pillar and Mr. G. Cameron were ushers. The Rev. F. E. H. James officiated.

The C and C Hall was decorated with lilac and apple blossom for the reception. A lace tablecloth covered the bride's table, which was centred with a three-tiered chocolate wedding cake.

For her going away costume, Mrs. Harmaworth wore

CENTENNIAL UNITED

Centennial United Church Women will meet Wednesday, May 9 at 2 p.m. in the Howard Harris Building. Topic for panel discussion is "Citizenship that Counts."

Wendy Burbridge Bride Of Kenneth G. Evans

Apple blossom and white lilies decorated St. Matthias Church last night when Wendy Burbridge and Kenneth G. Evans were joined in holy matrimony. The bride, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Burbridge and granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hartley, exchanged nuptial vows with Kenneth Gordon, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Evans.

The bride's floor-length white brocade gown featured a scoop neckline and long sleeves. A high crystal coronet held her bouffant veil and she carried a bouquet of pink roses, stephanotis and trailing ivy.

Matron of honor, Mrs. Darlene Burbridge, bridesmaid, Mrs. Marilyn Baird and bridesmaid, Miss Linda Evans wore identical frocks of mint green with accessories en tone. Their flowers were pink carnations, stephanotis and ivy.

The bride was given in marriage by her father at the double-ring ceremony officiated by the Rev. August Cameron of Lundavra. Mr. Robert Copley was best man and Mr. Brian Burbridge and Mr. Philip Trace were ushers.

Mr. T. Catterall proposed the toast at the reception held at the Golden Slipper. The bride and groom cut a three-tiered wedding cake. For her going away outfit Mrs. Evans chose a rose two-piece suit, white hat and black accessories. Following their honeymoon to Portland, Ore., and other northern states, the couple will make their home at 637 McKenzie Avenue.

Tonight at the Royal Theatre they will take their places on the stage to receive diplomas and medals from Mother Mary Angelus, Sister Mary Ann Celesta and Sister Miriam Claire.

Lieut.-Col. W. J. Mosedale, chairman of St. Joseph's Hospital board of management, will be in the chair and the invocation will be given by Rt. Rev. A. J. McLellan.

His Worship Mayor Richard B. Wilson will bring greetings from the city and V. G. Stuart, MD, president of St. Joseph's medical staff, from the medical staff. G. Walther, MD, CM, will present the graduates.

Eleanor Diane Duncan of Port Alberni will give the valedictory.

The bursary for the highest average in provincial examinations by a St. Joseph's nurse will be presented to Arlyne Gertrude Slater and the bursary for faithful observance of the school motto, "Not for Ourselves Alone," will go to Donna Marie Griswold of Ladysmith.

Norma Mary Ellen Bowers of Victoria will receive the bursary for highest average in examinations during the three-year course and Joan Carole Lucas, also of Victoria, is winner of the award for proficiency in pediatric nursing.

The award for proficiency in operating room technique will go to Marilyn Jean Ure of Nelson and Susan Hilder of Prince Rupert for the highest in urology. The award for highest average in first and second year examinations will go to Sandra Jo-Anne Johnstone.

The X-ray technology proficiency award will be presented to Cecilia Kerridge of Victoria and the medical technology award will go to Marilee Ross of Nanaimo.

A reception for parents of the graduating class will be held in the Nurses' Residence following the commencement exercises.

On Monday morning there will be Father and Daughter breakfast in the students' dining room and in the afternoon, a Mother and Daughter tea at the Old Charming Inn.

The graduation dance was held at the Crystal Garden on Friday evening.

This year is a special one for graduates and staff of St. Joseph's Hospital as all have one objective in mind—to raise the necessary funds to build the new wing.

She's Real Don't Pinch Her

By EILEEN LEAROYD

If you were walking along the Causeway one spring day and you saw a girl—a pretty girl—dressed in a gown of dainty dillies giving flowers away, would you think she was Ophelia?

And if this girl had 20 yards of skirt blowing in the wind, and her dress was pink, trimmed with blue ribbons, would you think you were dreaming?

And if she offered you a nosegay of tulips, or perhaps a sachet of sweet-smelling lavender from the flower basket on her arm, would you think you were losing your mind?

Friends and readers, if you should see this girl—don't pinch her. She is real.

FLOWER WELCOME

She is dark-haired and dainty, Risha Golby and she is Victoria's waterfront flowergirl who will welcome tourists and visitors to the city with her basket of blooms, the whole summer long.

Raise $154 At Sale

A successful tea and bake sale, to celebrate the Jubilee year of the Church and the City's Centennial was held by the Fairfield United Church women in the hall, under the convenship of Mrs. D. R. Allen. Profit was $154.

Mrs. V. A. Beaumont, president of the—Presbyterian United Church Women, opened the tea and Fairfield United honorary president, Mrs. H. K. Johnston and president, Mrs. H. H. Youson greeted guests.

The hall was decorated with dogwood, yellow flowers and tapers. Sketches of early Victoria, the work of local high school student Ellis Pryce-Jones, hung on the walls.

Mrs. J. Holmes was in charge of ticket sales and Mrs. B. Henderson and Mrs. J. Grier were in charge of the bake sale.

A feature of the tea was a display of heirlooms lent by members of the congregation and arranged by Mrs. J. Humble. There were also scenes of work done by church groups of 100 years ago, enacted by the Misses Dianne Campbell, Kathy and Judy Anderson, Susan Fawcett, Eileen McCammon, Sheila McIvor and Janis Sandgren.

Maytime Tea Realizes $825

The Maytime tea held recently by the Free Cancer Dressing Station realized the sum of $825.

The event was opened by Dr. W. W. Bell, associate grand patron of the Order of the Eastern Star.

Mrs. Doris Watson, past grand matron, assisted by the worthy matrons of the local Eastern Star Chapters welcomed guests. Mrs. May McShee was general convener and Mrs. Ethel McLagan and Miss Ethel Brown were in receipt of custom.

Sylvia Firkens Is Honored

Mrs. Bea Landy recently held a shower in her Wollaston Street home in honor of May bride-elect, Miss Sylvia Firkens. Guests included Miss Jill Mutter, Miss Phyllis Nicholson, Mrs. Dorren Westoby, Miss Kathy McGregor, Miss Maye Leem, Miss Elsie Watson and Mrs. Velma Bass. Miss Jean McGregor entertained at her home on Wellington Avenue, for Miss Firkens. The guests included Mrs. R. Firkens, Mrs. W. McNeil, Mrs. Bea Landy, Mrs. G. Fulton, Mrs. W. Warn, Mrs. C. Cruickshank, Mrs. D. Messerschmidt, Miss Elleen Gardner, Mrs. L. Messerschmidt, Mrs. E. Douglas, Miss Wenda Douglas, Mrs. P. Shemilt and Mrs. C. Meadmore.

Immediately aware of it, but when they are greeted by Risha they will be meeting rather an extraordinary young lady. The hand that holds the nosegays belongs to the top honor student of Westerham School. Among other things Risha is five years ahead of her grade in French, two in Latin, a scholarship student at the Vivian Briggs ballet school and winner of two first prizes in the recent speech arts festival.

Risha is also a member of the Fantasy Theatre, paints, sews, models and is a "house captain" at school.

BRAIN CHILD

Young Miss Golby has obviously been picked for her brains as well as beauty, but while she is well up on such matters as local history for centennial inquirers, she has been trained to direct the traffic to the local publicity bureau.

Victoria's flowergirl was selected by the tourist trade group of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, but she is really the "brain child" of one member in particular, Mrs. Avis Walton, who has worked untiringly for this waterfront feature for some years.

The unique tourist attraction is a combined effort of many groups, from the necessary

FUN AT COLWOOD

All funds from the Playland from May 12 and 13 will assist the flowergirl in her work. And the fun to be had at Colwood is considerable, for there are 3½ acres of surprises and wonderment for children as well as golf, tennis, badminton and tea for adults.

Children may ride in a goat-pulled surrey coach, ride ponies, pat rabbits and lambs and, when summer comes, and, when summer comes, swim in an entrancing tree-fringed pool which bubbles fresh from Goldstream.

Victoria's flowergirl may be seen on the Causeway most weekends from now on, and every day after school's out until September. She's really real. She's Risha Golby. Don't pinch her.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: You claim you can tell a great deal about people from the letters they write. I'm sure this is true. Frequently the unsaid but implied thought comes through clearly. From reading your column over a period of years, Ann Landers, I have learned something about YOU. You don't like old people.

You repeatedly suggest that elderly members of the family be shipped off to the old folks home. When children write to complain about the burden of aging parents, your advice is "hold a family pow-wow, make it plain that all the children must pitch in and get your mother an apartment, pay for a housekeeper, or send her to a home for the aged."

Did it ever occur to you that some parents don't want to be in an apartment with a housekeeper—or in an institution—with a collection of unwanted antiques—who have been sent away to die? Some of us prefer to stay with our loved ones and be members of a family.

I can well afford to pay for my own apartment and a housekeeper, but my children want me with them. And here I want to stay as long as the good Lord gives me days.—OVER 70.

Dear Over 70: Since you've been reading this column for years you must be aware that it is primarily a clearing house of trouble. People write to me when things are bad.

A common thread runs through most of the letters pertaining to older people. Usually, it's the daughter or the daughter-in-law who writes. The elderly parent (or parents) are in poor health and the medical bills are staggering. The other brothers and sisters refuse to help out. In some cases the older folks are meddlesome, domineering or demanding. In extreme cases they are invalids, bed-ridden or senile. One distraught daughter-in-law wrote, "Grandma must be cared for like an infant. I've been on 25-hour nursing duty for two years. I've lost 20 pounds. She doesn't even know who I am or where she is. If I don't get some help soon she'll bury me."

In such a case, home care makes no sense—and I say so. Most older people are not a problem. They are cheerful and active and loved. Their wisdom and years of experience enrich the entire family. But no one writes to me about these people, because they are not a problem.

Wedding in East

Of interest to Victorians is the recent marriage of Capt. Joseph Allan Conyers, Royal Canadian Regiment, son of Mrs. Leon U. Conyers, 2212 Cadboro Bay Road, and No-reen Marion MacDonald, daughter of Mrs. J. W. MacDonald of Brantford, Ont., and the late Mr. MacDonald, in Brantford.

The bride entered the Brant Avenue United Church wearing a floor-length gown of bluish white delustrated satin with lace jacket, featuring lily point sleeves. Her shoulder-length veil of illusion net was held by a coronet of orange blossom and pearls and she carried a bouquet of pink and white roses with a horseshoe of white Scottish heather. Pearl earrings and a replica of the insignia of the groom's regiment were the bride's jewelry.

Maid-of-honor was the bride's sister, Miss Carolyn MacDonald, and the Misses Janice Fort and Ann Adams of Toronto were bridesmaids. They chose American Beauty delustrated satin sheaths with matching jackets. An American Beauty rose held their white veils and they carried baskets of spring flowers.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. W. Moore, and Dr. Arthur Kewley officiated. Lieut. W. Smith was best man. Lieut. Ray Johnson and Lieut. R. Cuthbert were ushers.

VICTORIA RESPONDS...!

NEW C-FAX

RADIO 810

"...more than any other station it is devoted to be of value to society. Through the presentation of accurate newscasts combined with fine cultural entertainment, C-FAX is performing an invaluable service to Victoria."

"...New C-FAX has brought a very welcome change to Victoria, with its unique program arrangement and widely appreciated music. The time and energy C-FAX puts into its everyday schedule is reflected in the responsive attitude of its large audience. Congratulations to C-FAX for introducing a bright new sound in Victoria!"

—I. A. J.

"...the excellent musical programs are relaxing and add to my enjoyment of each day. The announcing is sincere and pleasant; the commercials are plain and honest. Let the others brag and use gaudy fanfares—the popularity of C-FAX proves that good music attracts listeners."

—B. R.

"...the improved programming, selective quality of the music, interesting minitutorials and apparent clear-mindedness of the announcing staff, coupled with much less than bizarre commercial advertising, has made this station worth listening to."

—F. C.

"...It's so easy to listen to! The romance of radio is really here—enriched with a fountain of music. Programming is complete and nicely informative. Commercials take a new meaning—you don't just endure them; you appreciate them, thanks to the quality and high standards of C-FAX. Colorful—always excellent!"

—G. M.

"...I like your modern, varied programming; also your freedom from 'dime a dozen' spots, thus giving announcers the opportunity to use commercials with authority and dramatic appeal."

—C. W.

"...C-FAX is the oasis on the dial—where I can quench my thirst for good music practically any time of the day. Its presentation is restful. It does not offend my sensibilities with trite advertising or sensationalism."

—G. B.

"...I enjoy the fine choice of music played, the hard-sell fare offered in which the advertisements are delivered. There is nothing lacking in the presentation of news and various other interesting items. I say 'thank you, C-FAX.'"

—E. M.

"...C-FAX is a trusted name in radio. One is assured of programs that are interesting, educational and presented in such a delightful manner. A person cannot measure the difference in a radio station by the number of hours it is on the air, but can hear the difference on C-FAX."

—V. W.

"...My radio is like an extra door. When I tune into 810 I open this door, and several announcers enter, supplying me with good music and reliable information—because I like to have friendly people in my house, I continue to listen to C-FAX."

—R. A.

"...C-FAX makes me proud to be a Victorian. The Tourist News and special, and C-FAX's stimulating music creates this feeling from dawn to dusk—like a short, short story your featurettes teach as they entertain. Yes, C-FAX is a friend indeed, good all days, always."

—E. A.

"...C-FAX's whole general tone is a refreshing one of respectful service to an aware public. This is reflected in a wide scope of fine, uninterrupted musical entertainment, efficient and helpful news coverage, and commercials which strive for straightforward presentations of firms and their products."

—J. W.

"...my busy farm life does not permit me much time to sit down to read or listen to music, but with my radio tuned to C-FAX in the work areas, I lighten my chores with music I enjoy, besides keeping informed of the happenings in our city and throughout the world."

—E. H. P.

"...C-FAX presents a panorama of the best. Popular and classical music, news, tourist information, community items, movie and book reviews, editorials and religious programs are all there, and are of the top-most quality. C-FAX serves every facet of public interest."

—R. S.

"...Good programs like good meals, be carefully prepared and tastefully served—arts in which the C-fax chefs excel. Your music is delightful, the news factual, while restrained advertising informs but does not infuriate. For all these reasons, your community voice is my listening choice."

—P. W.

"...consistently offer relaxing good music, current news reported without sensationalism, and announcements and commercials presented in a straightforward, honest way, without annoying frills and fanfare. You could improve your broadcasting day only by increasing 'its length.'"

—J. C.

"...On 810 I can escape from the brassy, hard-sell fare offered by most radio stations, and listen instead to adult-level music, without an overabundance of advertisements and 'gimmicks.'"

—E. F.

"...meets the needs of the general public. Good, unbiased news, music acceptable to the most discriminating listener, and careful consideration to the same wishes of the younger set, all blend to give confidence that sensitive personal entertainment has been recognized and planned accordingly."

—J. A. W.

"...While others on my dial are doing their best to shove news, sports, opinions, or abominable musical noises into my ears, your adult selections are refreshing and indeed stimulating. Driving to work is now a pleasure, thanks to your good music."

—R. H.

"...station dedicated to pleasing the varied tastes of listeners, with a thoughtfully arranged schedule of hourly mood music, valuable local information, world news, and featurettes that are guaranteed to keep us up with the times."

—E. E. S.

"...Congratulations for keeping entertainment and service to Victoria a high calibre."

—M. L.

"...the programming reflects a sincere desire to provide the responsible broadcasting service an adult public deserves. There is a genuine effort to keep the man on the street informed of just what is happening around Victoria."

—E. D.

Baby Killed At Colwood

A year-old baby boy died in hospital late Friday, shortly after he was struck by a car in the navy housing development at Belmont Park in Colwood.

Stewart Wright, infant son of L.S. and Mrs. Wallace Wright, 236 Lascelles Crescent, died in St. Joseph's Hospital as the result of head injuries received in the accident.

PARENTS AWAY

Both parents were out of the city at the time. They had left the child in the care of a baby-sitter.

Colwood RCMP said yesterday the youngster had apparently been playing on the yard in front of the house, then wandered out onto the road.

DRIVER NAMED

Mrs. Katherine Hayes, 144 Egerton, was driving the car at the time of the accident, police said.

She told police that, just as she moved away from her parking place on Lascelles Crescent, she felt a slight bump.

Firemen Want Time Cut

VANCOUVER (CP) — Negotiations leading to adoption of a 42-hour week for Vancouver firemen are to continue Monday. Officials said the six-hour reduction in the work week would cost the city $750,000 a year.

It would require the addition of 100 men to the city's fire-fighting force.

Negotiations between the city and the fire-fighters union are compulsory under terms of a binding conciliation board judgment handed down last Monday.

The board ordered study of the proposal as further evidence could be presented if no agreement is reached before conclusion of the 1962-63 contract year. Gordon R. Anderson, president of the fire-fighters union, said that almost every major city has reduced firemen's working week to 42 hours or less and the work week goes as low as 38½ hours in Regina.

Fired Chief Jails Mayor

MONTREAL (CP) — Mayor Paul Provost of suburban LaSalle was arrested on a charge of assault late Friday by George Beaulne, the police chief he fired 12 hours earlier. Arrest came when the mayor ordered Chief Beaulne to leave his office.

Navy Treat

Highlight of HMCS Jonquire open house yesterday in Inner Harbor was free ice cream. Lt. John Hay helps son Kevin, 4, with ice cream allotment supplied by ship's company. Frigate will also be open for inspection from 1:30 to 4:15 p.m. today. — (Colonist photo.)

Survived Nazis - Killed in Crash

TORONTO (CP) — Two survivors of the Nazi Auschwitz concentration camp and a friend from Israel died in a train-car crash in northwest Toronto yesterday. Killed were Joseph Weinbaum of suburban Downsview; his wife Gilda, both 31, and Mrs. Rachel Bursztain, 46, of Tel Aviv.

Ambulance Field Day

Vancouver Team Wins Top Award

A five-man first aid team representing the Metropolitan Ambulance Service, Vancouver, yesterday won the Daily Colonist Trophy as top senior group competing in the St. John Ambulance Brigade's 19th annual field day.

Other top winner in the senior division was a team representing the Comox Logging Company, Ladysmith. The group took both the B.C. Electric cup and the Victoria Field Day trophy.

VICTORIA SQUAD

MacMillan and Bloedel's award for the top team comprised of both men and women went to the St. John Ambulance of Victoria squad. In the senior women's division, St. John Ambulance of Nanaimo won the Victoria Daily Times cup; the E. C. Carson cup went to St. John Ambulance of Victoria, and the First Aid Ski Patrol, Vancouver, took the Yarrows Limited award.

NAVAL TEAM

A naval fire department team from Esquimalt won the B.C. Forest Products trophy in the novice event and was chosen to represent southern Vancouver Island in the provincial finals slated for Nelson June 30.

The Canadian Scottish cadets of Courtenay won both the John Strood Memorial trophy and the Stewart and Hudson cup in the junior boys' finals.

In the junior girls division, Victoria Nursing Cadets 61C took both the Francis cup and the Gardner cup, Victoria Nursing Cadets 176C won the C. E. M. Pemberton trophy.

U.S. Congress Aid Asked for Lumber

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A resolution calling on congress to help Pacific northwest lumbermen regain Atlantic coast markets lost to Canadian producers was endorsed by the Western Governors' conference Friday.

Governor Rosellini of Washington said: "Understanding as our state administrations might be and how actively they seek help, the solution is one which must be brought about at the federal level. It is a problem requiring specific congressional action." The area's lumber industry has seen sales to Atlantic coast markets shrink 50 per cent in the past 10 years because of inroads by Canadian producers, Rosellini said.

Venezuelan Uprising Smashed

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP)—Troops loyal to President Romulo Betancourt smashed a leftist uprising by marines in the coastal city of Carupano Saturday night and captured three rebel leaders, a government source reported.

Hands Off Colonies!

British Colonial Secretary Reginald Maudling sharply warned the United Nations to keep its hands off Britain's colonies yesterday. Britain does not need to be supervised or enjoined in bringing territories towards independence, he said.

Casualty figures were not available but the fighting was said to have been violent. The government source said that by nightfall the loyalist forces were conducting a clean-up campaign in Carupano, which is 300 miles east of here. The Carupano garrison of 400 marines and 50 military policemen revolted Friday, demanding Betancourt's resignation and calling on other military units to join them.

GARRISON ACCUSED

Betancourt accused the garrison Friday night of plotting to set up a Castro-type Communist regime. He gave them an ultimatum to surrender by dawn.

SNIPING ACTION

Earlier Saturday the loyalist forces were reported advancing into Carupano from three different directions over mined roads.

The rebels fell back, breaking up their headquarters in a mid-city high school, and started a sniping action from rooftops and houses.

LEADER CAPTURED

First reports reaching here told of the capture of Capt. Jesus Molina Villagras when government forces occupied an electric power plant. Molina had been identified by rebel broadcast.

Who's Behind Bars?

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI)—City zoo director Iva Fogarty has complained that zoo visitors have fed lighted cigarettes to ostriches, set one ostrich afire, fed rocks to a baby sea lion until it died, blinded a porcupine, poisoned 40 animals and stoned birds in their cages.

Real Initiative!

Clock was set back 100 years on Douglas Street Saturday when Mrs. Arthur Drew of 2529 Empire, and Frank Phipps, 404 Lampson, strolled leisurely among hurrying shoppers to point up Victoria's centennial year. Said Mrs. Drew: "Nobody seemed to be doing much about the centennial so we thought we'd take the initiative." Her costume is 100 years old.—(Ryan Bros. photo.)

Pearson:

Jobs Slump Lies Ahead

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP)—Liberal Leader Lester Pearson said here Saturday night that figures prepared for the government indicate an average 485,000 persons will be laid off next year unless action is taken.

About 535,000 unemployed are forecast for 1964 in figures prepared for the commission of inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Fund, he said.

IS HE AWARE?

Mr. Pearson, speaking to an audience of about 400, asked "Is Prime Minister Diefenbaker aware of these figures?"

If he is not, the Liberal leader asked, how has he been doing his work? How has he been looking after the interests of the Canadian people?

"If he is aware of them how can he stand up and tell the Canadian people that we've never had it so good and there's nothing to worry about?"

MAD CHANCE

He said Mr. Diefenbaker, who opened his campaign officially Saturday night in London, Ont., probably is asking for re-election so he can produce a centenary plan for Canada's 100th birthday in 1967.

In 1956 he had asked for a working majority to carry out a national development plan of five to seven years, said the Liberal chief, "but he had his chance."

DEFEATIST?

"How could he say it was defeatist to talk of Canadian problems? How can he claim that this country automatically is on the threshold of a great economic upsurge?"

"They talk about an upsurge and look what they did to the Canadian dollar," he said this week to a pegged 92¢ cents in terms of U.S. currency.

As 5,000 Swelter

Diefenbaker Woos 'Em Whacks 'Em

Wealth, Happiness In 'Bright Vision'

By RICHARD JACKSON
Special to the Colonist

LONDON, Ont. — Prime Minister Diefenbaker and "hometown Ontario" have renewed membership in their own mutual admiration society.

The people of this voter-packed southwestern corner of Ontario gave him his biggest and best crowd so far of this campaign . . . 5,000 of them packed to the roof of the London Arena.

And he gave them his bright new vision of the greater Canada to come.

He called it "this finer Canada of your dreams and mine."

And while on paper it might look just a little corny side, the cheering throng found it anything but corn.

JOHN DIEFENBAKER

Many Components

The new Canada of the Diefenbaker dream had many components. Among them:

- A revised, modern federal tax code, based on a royal commission investigation directed to eliminate taxation anomalies and inequalities;
- Increased government credits for exports;
- A longer line of federal credit for the modernization of industrial plants;
- Stepped-up assistance for industrial and pure research;
- Expanded production and distribution facilities for electric power;
- Larger and more widely dispersed works projects;
- A fuller measure of "social justice";
- Contributory pensions over and above old age assistance.

'Promises Kept'

These and other things, promised the prime minister, would make for "more jobs, more wealth, more happiness."

The look was forward. The drive was to "build, expand, develop."

This was the future. But what of the past?

"I have kept my promises," said the prime minister simply. "I have kept faith with you."

And by its quick cheer, the crowd let him know that "hometown Ontario" agreed he had.

He spoke for 90 minutes. It was too long . . . because it was too hot.

Spring must have been busting out all over from Brantford, through London to Windsor, and the thermometer, under the blazing afternoon sun, soared to 83, stoking the London area like a furnace.

It must have been 100 or more in the highest rows just under the arena roof, when the 5,000 squeezed in, filling every chair and jamming the standing room in the aisles.

The candidates from the 23 ridings of "Hometown Ontario" had come to London with busloads of their constituents, and some were left standing outside when the fire marshal, proclaiming that the arena was filled beyond capacity, ordered the doors closed.

Ushers said they turned "hundreds" away.

Forced to Retreat

Inside, under the blistering roof, the 5,000 sat and stood, fanning themselves with their programs.

It became, finally, insufferably hot, and in sheer self-defence, perhaps 100 men and women, dripping wet, were forced to move out of the top rear row of seats and flee for a breath of cool air, to the exits.

The prime minister, if he noticed that he was losing some of his crowd, gave no sign of it.

This was his opening night of the campaign, and with a crowd as large and enthusiastic as this, he was going to have his say.

Some of it he had said before, but most of it was new to "Hometown Ontario," and they found it to their liking.

West Coast Tragedy Sinking Troller Takes Two Lives

TOFINO (Special)—Thirty feet of water meant death Saturday for two of four Vancouver Island Indians whose fishing troller sank a few minutes after it struck a reef.

REACHED SAFETY

Mrs. Alice Sam, 61, and Danny Charlie, 43, both of the Ahousat reserve near here, drowned when the troller Barnacle went down in McIntosh Bay, 30 feet from the shore of Vargas Island. The island is two miles northwest of this west island coast community.

Mark Attleo, owner and skipper of the small troller, and Mrs. Sam's husband Paul, also both of Ahousat, managed to struggle to safety.

Mr. Attleo swam to shore while Mr. Sam, who cannot swim, reached a dugout canoe and paddled to the nearby Christie Indian residential school to sound the alarm.

But an SOS sent out by the Barnacle's crew in the moments between collision and sinking about 6 a.m. had been heard by the Tofino lifeboat.

INQUEST DUE

The lifeboat crew and local RCMP recovered the bodies and took them to Tofino after the troller had been raised and beached.

An inquest will be held this week.

Canadian Proposal Draws French Balk

ATHENS (CP)—Strong French objections to a Canadian proposal held up drafting of the final communiqué of the NATO council meeting Saturday night.

France took exception to the Canadian suggestion that the communiqué come out against testing of nuclear weapons. All NATO members except France supported the Canadian proposal.

France also objected to the new United States proposal for a European voice in the control of American nuclear weapons stationed in Europe.

French objections forced adjournment of the conference to 10 a.m. Sunday and External Affairs Minister Green of Canada likely will have to delay his planned departure time for Canada.

France supported the Canadian proposal that NATO back the efforts of the Geneva disarmament conference. But it balked at the second Canadian proposal that NATO take a stand against nuclear testing.

This is because France wants to test her own atomic bombs.

The French delegation also favored tough wording in the communiqué against Russia, which most delegations, including Canada's, opposed.

Slash Urged

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP)—Union leader Walter Reuther said Saturday exorbitant auto industry profits require a significant slash in car prices under terms of President Kennedy's economic stabilization formula.

"I clasped my neck of the wolf which attacked me. I stuck my left arm into the wolf's mouth and blocked his windpipe. But he still struggled. So I put my right arm round his neck and strangled him," he said.

The wolves and other animals, believed to include leopards, attacked the flock at Kaymaklar, near Buea.

Wolves Attack Village

ISTANBUL (Reuters)—A pack of wolves attacked a sheepfold near Buea in western Turkey Saturday night and mauled 14 persons, five of them children, in a 45-minute life-and-death struggle.

One of the children died from his injuries.

A brawny villager, Kemal Gurbuz, 22, said he killed one wolf with his bare hands but lost his left arm in doing so.

Speaking from his hospital bed in Izmir, eight miles from Buea, he said:

"I clasped my neck of the wolf which attacked me. I stuck my left arm into the wolf's mouth and blocked his windpipe. But he still struggled. So I put my right arm round his neck and strangled him," he said.

Bullet in Thigh Ends in Heart

WASHINGTON (AP)—A gunman's bullet entered Ivan's thigh, travelled through his blood vessels and ended up inside his heart—blinding Ivan into medical history.

Chipper and getting well fast now after a three-hour open-heart operation, Ivan Malinovsky, 33, joined Georgetown University Hospital doctors Saturday in describing his ordeal of last February.

His heart had held the bullet for two weeks. The half-inch long, quarter-inch diameter, 28-calibre bullet had been temporarily laid in Ivan's body.

Surgeons at another hospital had probed in vain for it in the wounded thigh—only to find, by repeated X-ray studies, higher and higher on the body, that it had lodged in Ivan's heart, three feet from the point of entry.

The misadventure, Russian-born Malinovsky, of a Washington chain-grocery store was shot while playing hide-and-seek around his auto with a young, unidentified gunman who wanted Ivan to open up the closed store and empty the safe.

The doctors said there are 30 cases like Ivan's in all medical history—that is, cases where a bullet or other missile enters the body in one place and is carried via a blood vessel to the heart.

Most such cases, they told reporters, have been battle casualties from shrapnel.

way, Drs. Charles Hufnagel and Peter Conrad said.

Hufnagel is famous as the developer of plastic aorta valves which have saved the lives of many sufferers from congenital defects of the aorta, the main pathway of blood from the heart.

But no plastic bulb was needed for Ivan. The bullet didn't lodge anywhere near his aorta. It did come close to the pulmonary artery, another key

Market Split Delays One Europe—Again

ATHENS (AP)—Official sources say a persistent split among the six Common Market nations has again delayed action on the projected European union. A six-nation ex-pan political union. A six-nation experts' meeting scheduled for Saturday here was cancelled. European officials say there will be no session coinciding with the NATO conference now going on.

More Room to Stay

Heavy Tourist Season on Hand

More visitors than ever before—and more places for them to stay when they get here.

This is how Vancouver Island's hotel and motel operators interviewed yesterday see the 1962 summer tourist season.

Advance bookings for June, July and August are running well ahead of last year's levels, they say, but it is hoped few visitors will actually be unable to find a place to sleep when they get here.

Looking at the onslaught of visitors to come, two things about the 1962 season have emerged as unique.

In the first place, physical volume of tourists is expected to reach unprecedented levels this year and the hotel men are looking to the Island's new accommodation centre to provide the adequate reservations system so urgently required.

Just as important, they add, is the fact this year's season will be much longer than ever before.

What is usually a two-month season will likely be stretched to almost four months by the thousands of visitors pouring into Seattle for the world's fair.

Windstorm Blamed For Fatal Accident

Wind was named yesterday as the cause of the accidental traffic death of a city restaurant operator during a storm here April 27.

Coroner Dr. J. H. Moore, who conducted an inquiry into the death of Tyrone Lum, 1826½ Government, said it was a case of accidental death caused when a windstorm blew Mr. Lum's small rear-engine car out of control near the Thetis Lake turnoff.

The car was literally blown out of control and the force of its forward motion slammed it into a rock wall, he said.

Colorful Part Of City Doomed?

A colorful part of Victoria's downtown lighting system is doomed unless city electrical experts and the Chamber of Commerce can pull a plan out of the hat this week.

The face-lifting program which calls for the removal of a forest of tall wooden power poles from the downtown area has lowered the boom on some 90 strings of colored lights which will come down unless another way can be found to hang them.

FOR YEAR ONLY

Chamber of Commerce secretary-manager John Coppinger sees the question as a problem in economics. The lights were hung—for one year only—back in 1937 to mark the coronation of King George VI. Now, more than 20 years later, the strings of bulbs are in such a state of disrepair it would be wiser to replace them than have them repaired.

DETRACT MORE

On May 11, Mr. Coppinger said, the chamber's retail merchants' group will meet and try to shed some light on the problem. They'll hear a talk by Ken Reid of the city light department.

Ald. Geoffrey Edgelow suggested the dangling wires and their bulbs detract more from the daytime scenery than they add to the evening color.

MUST BE MET

"This is a question of changing to conform with the times," Ald. Edgelow said. "The demands of our modernization program must be met, but I suggest there would be no better time than the present to take stock of our entire approach to decorative lighting."

SOMETHING BETTER

The alderman said he wasn't sorry to see the mouldering wires come down—but wants something better in their place.

"Why drape a lot of lights across the streets? Why not start a program among the owners of the downtown buildings to provide modern lighting across the whole front of the structures?"

"Now that would really be something to see."

Talk on Monday

Horace Dawson, principal of Colquitz Junior High School, will speak at a meeting of the Douglas Rotary Club at 6 p.m. Monday in Holyrood House.

On May 21, 1957, 4,000 persons jammed Memorial Arena to hear Mr. Diefenbaker's blistering attack on the Liberals and his "northern vision" message.

John D Here May 29

Plans are on hand for staging the biggest political rally in Victoria's history when Prime Minister Diefenbaker speaks at Memorial Arena May 29.

The Progressive Conservative leader's visit to Victoria was confirmed last night by A. DeB. McPhillips and George Chatterton, Tory candidates for Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich ridings.

"We are making plans for Vancouver Island's largest political rally and there is no doubt, from the initial reaction in this area, Victoria will be repeating the performance of 1957 when the Prime Minister last spoke in the city," said Mr. McPhillips.

On May 21, 1957, 4,000 persons jammed Memorial Arena to hear Mr. Diefenbaker's blistering attack on the Liberals and his "northern vision" message.

System Wrong For City

A city alderman's suggestion that police and fire departments should merge as an economy measure failed to find backing in Esquimalt, where a merged public safety force has been in existence a number of years.

While declining comment on the budget-cutting suggestion of city Ald. Geoffrey Edgelow, Esquimalt reeve A. C. Wurtele said a merged force had worked in his municipality because of circumstances "peculiar to Esquimalt."

"We have an agreement with the navy fire department which works out quite well," said the reeve.

Meets Tuesday

Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health will hold a meeting in the library at the Health and Welfare Centre, 1947 Cook Street, at 1:15 p.m. Tuesday.

Sunny breaks in Sunday's cloudy skies are expected to lure hundreds of Victorians to the annual Indian festival in Brentwood Bay today, with Education Minister Peterson conducting the official opening at 2:30 p.m.

Criminal Assault Charged

CAMPBELL RIVER—Willis Kerry Elford, 20-year-old Campbell River resident, was charged formally in police court yesterday with criminal assault in connection with the rape of a Masters Road housewife last Monday.

He made no plea and was remanded to May 14 as Magistrate P. E. Lewis advised him to obtain counsel.

Elford was arrested at his home Friday night following a four-day police search of the area.

Duncan Man Survives Blow of Logs

DUNCAN—A Duncan logger was in serious condition last night after being crushed by logs at 4 p.m. Friday.

Kenneth Williams, 33, Duncan, suffered a broken pelvis, legs and abrasions.

After treatment in Duncan he was rushed by ambulance to St. Joseph's Hospital in Victoria.

Hospital officials at Duncan said the logs rolled on him from a logging truck.

Inquest Into Fatal Crash Awaits Injured Witness

DUNCAN—Inquest into the highway death of four persons near Mill Bay April 27 will be postponed until a witness is released from hospital RCMP said yesterday.

The witness, truck driver Philip Burnett of 2539 Cranmore, is in good condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital with arm and leg fractures.

Killed in the car-truck crash were the car's occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Harford of Duncan and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Greenwood of Edmonton.

RCMP said they received no reply to their appeal for witnesses to the collision. They had hoped the driver of a southbound car passed by the truck moments before the accident would have volunteered as a witness.

PRINCE CHARLES

Competing with other Vancouver Island canoes, and others from the Fraser Valley and Washington state, will be the 33-foot four-inch Prince Charles, carrying a Nanaimo Indian tribe racing team.

The cedar log from which the canoe was carved was donated to the city of Nanaimo by MacMillan and Bloedel for the Indian village at the centennial fall fair in Nanaimo in 1958.

ROYAL PERMISSION

First cut in the log was made by Prince Philip while he and the Queen were visiting the village and the Queen gave permission for the canoe to be named in honor of her son.

The log was moved to the reserve when Tom Seward and the crew worked a year to complete the job.

Raced for the first time at the Tsartlip festival a year ago, it came fourth out of 13.

WHITE WARRIORS

The Nanaimo tribe also is training the Nanaimo White Warriors, believed the first all-white Indian canoe racing team, to use the canoe against Indians at the annual Departure Bay carnival July 21.

Festival today also includes parachute diving and crowning of a princess.

Farmers Answer North Oyster Claim

NANAIMO—A spokesman for a rural group in the North Oyster district has attacked statements made by ratepayers' association secretary-treasurer

Alex Smith and reported in the Colonist yesterday.

The controversy in the Ladysmith area concerns a plan to put financing of Ladysmith Hospital, which was built by public subscription, on the tax rolls.

Mr. Smith had said that, since the ratepayers recently voted to form a hospital district, they affirmed the belief the hospital should be paid for by tax money.

Now, a spokesman for the opposing group of farmers says Mr. Smith is out of touch with the North Oyster ratepayers' association.

George Wyndlow of Yellow Point claims the vote to form a hospital district around Ladysmith was a "snap vote."

Mr. Wyndlow challenged Mr. Smith to produce the election results. He claimed they have not been made public and only the officials know the results.

A panel of experts will discuss what critics look for in judging a jury exhibition at the gallery May 22 at 8:30 p.m. Gallery members will be admitted free.

Winners of two cash prizes and eight honorable mention awards were also selected yesterday but won't be announced until formal opening of the jury show at 8:30 p.m. Thursday.

The jury which made the selections: Miss Grace Melvin, painter and former head of the design department at the Vancouver School of Art; Edward Thomas, assistant director of the Seattle Art Museum; Sam Black, painter and lecturer at UBC.

Gallery curator Colin Graham said the standard of this year's show is lower than previous years because of the new ruling that each artist submit only one work for selection by the jury.

Mr. Graham said the experimental four-day showing of all entries in the jury show, held last week, was received with great interest. A total of 700 people attended.

For those who submitted paintings that failed to catch the eye of jury members, there'll be an opportunity to learn where they fell short of standards set for the exhibition.

A panel of experts will discuss what critics look for in judging a jury exhibition at the gallery May 22 at 8:30 p.m. Gallery members will be admitted free.

Winners of two cash prizes and eight honorable mention awards were also selected yesterday but won't be announced until formal opening of the jury show at 8:30 p.m. Thursday.

The jury which made the selections: Miss Grace Melvin, painter and former head of the design department at the Vancouver School of Art; Edward Thomas, assistant director of the Seattle Art Museum; Sam Black, painter and lecturer at UBC.

Gallery curator Colin Graham said the standard of this year's show is lower than previous years because of the new ruling that each artist submit only one work for selection by the jury.

Mr. Graham said the experimental four-day showing of all entries in the jury show, held last week, was received with great interest. A total of 700 people attended.

For those who submitted paintings that failed to catch the eye of jury members, there'll be an opportunity to learn where they fell short of standards set for the exhibition.

Four Way Shot

LONDON (CP) — A vaccine "cocktail" giving protection against polio, diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus in one shot has been successful in a clinical test, the British Medical Association journal, the Lancet, reports.

A team of Belfast University scientists tested the four-in-one serum on 44 babies, aged six to 19 months.

All the children developed far more protective antibodies against polio virus than had been the case with standard Salk vaccine, said the report by Professor George Dick and his team.

NOT STRONG ENOUGH

Protection against the other diseases was similar to that given by three-in-one vaccines already used in Britain. Until now polio vaccine was left out because it was usually not strong enough to give complete and lasting protection when mixed in the "cocktail."

The scientists reported it may eventually be possible to add to the cocktail vaccines against measles and mumps, to make a six-in-one serum.

COMPLETE PROTECTION

Scientists report the four-in-one vaccine should induce virtually complete protection against polio if used to immunize infants in the second six months of life.

They say the simplicity of a single vaccination would be a great help to health officers and general practitioners. It would also produce a greater chance of obtaining higher rates of complete immunization among infants.

Tax Rate Set In Qualicum

QUALICUM BEACH—First reading of a $125,000 budget bylaw and a 36-mill rate bylaw was given at a recent village council meeting. The mill rate shows an increase of .85 over the 1961 figure. The school assessment mill rate for Qualicum Beach, which has risen from 18.81 last year to 19.32, mainly accounts for the slight increase.

He's Drifting Round World!

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Adventurer De Vere Baker figures it's time to be drifting on.

He started a trip around the world, by raft, at high noon yesterday.

Baker, 48, is the man who drifted from Redondo Beach to Hawaii in 1958. That was on the Lehi IV. He has more ambitious plans for his successor.

"We'll drift down to Acapulco, Mexico," he predicted, "have the raft hauled across Mexico, and then follow the gulf current to England."

Baker, a student of winds and currents, figures he'll have to have the raft towed from England through the Mediterranean and into the Indian Ocean.

Atomic Mortar For U.S. Army

WASHINGTON (AP) — The army's Davy Crockett — an atomic mortar for frontline troops — finally is in the hands of U.S. forces.

The defence department, confirming this for the first time, declined to say where the Crockett has been assigned.

But indications are the first of these weapons probably have been given to army forces deployed in West Germany, facing 22 Russian divisions in Communist East Germany.

Duncan Area Runs Short Of Loggers

By KLAUS MUENTER

DUNCAN—For the first time in more than two years, the local National Employment Service office has experienced a serious shortage of skilled loggers and unskilled workers substituted as chokermen, says manager R. S. Robinson.

He said vacancies for shovel operators, logging truck drivers, rigging slingers and head loaders were difficult to fill. General employment conditions improved in April.

FEWER AND MORE

The report said 376 male and 214 female applicants registered compared with 531 male and 203 female job seekers in the same month a year ago.

Full production in the logging industry was maintained with no cutbacks in April as operators strived to build up inventories in case of possible shutdowns during expected hot weather later this month.

TREE PLANTING

Mr. Robinson said all tree planting will be completed shortly but some young men could already be placed as chokermen.

Meanwhile, with the approaching holiday season, the local Unemployment Insurance Commission office is prepared to handle inquiries from university and high school students anxious to find summer employment.

An official said the increasing number of students will cause a surplus. All merchants and householders requiring casual labor are requested to phone the local office at 748-8111.

116 Experts on Island Safety

DUNCAN—"In this hall we have over 1,000 years of logging experience," Harry Dembrick, manager of B.C. Forest Products logging operations, said yesterday as 116 experts and leaders from mid-Island logging firms discussed safety methods at the K of P Hall here.

Eleven subjects on logging camp safety were discussed in groups and spokesmen summarized their findings at the end of the conference.

All agreed co-operation of management and workers, discipline and understanding, a good safety training program and a little diplomacy are needed to conquer the menace of industrial accidents.

Speakers said every supervisor must practise what he preaches and safety programs should be extended into homes and onto highways.

Music May 14

Nanaimo Pianist Home for Recital

NANAIMO — Well-known native son Kenneth Bertram will return from Seattle to give a piano recital May 14 in the senior high school.

A 1960 graduate of the school, he is completing the second year of an arts course at the University of Washington, where he is majoring in music. He already has given two recitals in Seattle.

LENGTHY STUDY

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bertram, Kenneth has been studying music for more than 13 years. He began at the age of 5 1/2 in St. Ann's convent here.

Then in 1951 Miss Marjorie Tebo, a piano teacher in Victoria discovered him at a Victoria music festival when he was only eight and won over 49 other candidates in his class.

MANY BURSARIES

Under her guidance, Kenneth went on to win many bursaries from Nanaimo Women's Musical Club and the upper island and Victoria music festivals.

In 1958 he won a scholarship to the Lyell Gustin School of Music in Saskatoon and spent the following summer at the Banff School of Fine Arts studying with Boris Roubakine.

Katangans Nab Congo Villages

LEOPOLDVILLE (AP) — Katanga gendarmes have captured the villages of Boya and Kyenge in northern Katanga in a new flare-up of fighting with Congolese national army troops, the Congolese news agency reported Saturday.

The agency said the gendarmes killed 95 villagers and threw their bodies into the nearby Luwengo River.

Two Hold Reunion In Congo

OTTAWA (CP) — Two Saskatchewan members of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry held a reunion in an unlikely place—Bukavu, an attractive town in the eastern Congo.

At the invitation of Lieut. Roger Beauregard of Gravelbourg, Sask., who commands a signal detachment at Bukavu, Regimental Sergeant-Major E. P. Shaw of Melfort, Sask., flew across the Congo from his signal unit at Leopoldville.

The men, only members of the PPCLI in the Congo, are serving with the United Nations. Once a year members of the regiment get together to celebrate the birthday of their colonel-in-chief, Lady Patricia Ramsey.

Nanaimo Building Issue

Hospital Board Backs Fight Against Council

By PAT O'NEILL

NANAIMO—The local hospital board has decided unanimously to oppose city council plans to allow real estate firms to build high-rise apartment blocks near the new hospital.

The board decided to seek a meeting with council to object to the plans.

Hospital board chairman Russ Inkster, in an interview with the Colonist, had already made his opposition to council's decision clear.

The board gave him its full-fledged backing and decided to take a strong stand.

The board claims the city council is doing a disservice to patients by allowing tall buildings to obstruct the view from the hospital.

It also says the two seven-storey apartment buildings, side by side, would block the patients' view from the first four floors of the new hospital.

Loggers Battle Menace

Sponsored by the B.C. Loggers' Association, the accident prevention training conference included representatives from logging camps at Nitinat Lake, Cowichan Lake, Deerholme, Jordan River and Harris Creek.

Eleven subjects on logging camp safety were discussed in groups and spokesmen summarized their findings at the end of the conference.

All agreed co-operation of management and workers, discipline and understanding, a good safety training program and a little diplomacy are needed to conquer the menace of industrial accidents.

Speakers said every supervisor must practise what he preaches and safety programs should be extended into homes and onto highways.

Other points included monthly safety inspections, lectures on the job, films and similar media, extensive safety award programs and safety education for children.

One group felt workers must take time to do a job the safe way.

OTHER BASIC RULES

Its spokesmen said other basic rules for accident prevention are picking the right man for the job and wearing the proper work clothes.

Another recommended exchange of safety committees among different logging camps to find new ideas for accident prevention and appointment of at least one representative from each department on the safety committee in mixed operations.

Underlining all voiced recommendations, Mr. Dembrick said, in closing the conference: "All suggestions are sound, workable and very much needed."

He reminded his listeners human nature is far more difficult to deal with than any machinery, or any it might be, and said no effort should be spared in trying to conquer accidents.

The conference was chaired by W. M. (Scotty) Allison, senior safety director of the B.C. Loggers' Association.

Island 'Disaster' Feared by PWA

VANCOUVER (CP) — Pacific Western Airlines told the Air Transport Board Friday loss of its Vancouver-Vancouver Island franchise would prove "almost disastrous."

Vice-president William Harris said the loss would cost the company a quarter of its revenues, raise per-mile costs and cost at least $250,000 to move employees and head office from Vancouver to Edmonton, the company's Prairie base.

FIVE POINTS

B.C. Air Lines has applied for PWA's Vancouver-Comox-Campbell River-Powell River-Port Hardy franchise.

PWA assistant general manager Don Watson said the "immature" B.C. Air Lines had not properly estimated costs of establishing the tightly-regulated Class 1 service.

B.C. Air listed $45,000 for pre-operation expenses while experience put the cost at $70,000 for pilot-training alone.

Girls' Drill Corps Forms Honor Guard

A profusion of spring flowers decorated Metropolitan United Church for the wedding of Miss Norma Dell Cameron and Mr. Leslie Francis Harmsworth Saturday evening.

Pews were marked with white bows and spring flowers. When the couple left the church they passed through a guard of honor formed by the Victoria Girls' Drill Corps, of which the bride was a member.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Norman W. Cameron, 1713 17th Avenue S.W., Calgary, Alta., and Mr. and Mrs. L. Harmsworth, 780 Lily Avenue.

The bride chose a period gown of pearl white silk faille. The bodice, re-embroidered with cut-out lace flowers, featured a deep oval neckline and lily-point sleeves. The full skirt, slightly en train, had a draped, stiffened infantia hip-line, centred with a faille bow and the panelled front was outlined with lace flowers. Her three-tiered chapel-length veil was held by a coronet of seed pearls, crystals and diamante. She carried mauve lilies and lily-of-the-valley.

Preceding the bride to the altar were her trio of attendants, matron of honor, Mrs. H. Pillar; bridesmaid, Mrs. C. Cameron; and bridesmaid, Miss Suzanne Bytrey, identically gowned in floor-length dresses of polished cotton in a turquoise and blue print. The sleeveless gowns were styled with curved necklines and V-decolletage at back. They wore hats of veiling and flowers en tone.

Flower girl, Leanne Cameron, bride's niece, wore a short white full-skirted frock with cummerbund and turquoise flowers in her hair.

Mr. David Jackson was best man and Mr. H. Pillar and Mr. G. Cameron were ushers. The Rev. F. E. H. James officiated.

The C and C Hall was decorated with lilac and apple blossom for the reception. A lace tablecloth covered the bride's table, which was centred with a three-tiered chocolate wedding cake.

For her going away costume, Mrs. Harmsworth wore a coat dress in jonquil yellow, frostrop wool, with matching accessories and orchid corsage. On their return from their honeymoon in Seattle, Portland and Calgary, Mr. and Mrs. Harmsworth will live at 566 Baker Street.

Of interest here is the announcement made by Professor and Mrs. Thomas M. C. Taylor of Vancouver telling of the forthcoming marriage of their daughter, Suzanne Louise, to Mr. Charles Manlius Johnson, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fitchew Johnson, Madrona Drive, Deep Cove.

V.I. The wedding will take place in St. Anselm's Church, Vancouver, on Monday, May 28, with Archdeacon Douglas Watney officiating. Both bride and groom-elect are 1962 graduates from the University of British Columbia. (Photos by Campbell Studio, Vancouver.)

Out-of-town guests here for Miss Catherine Ogden's graduation from St. Joseph's School of Nursing are Miss Fern Agnew, a student nurse at St. Boniface General Hospital, Winnipeg, Mrs. Len Ramay, Langley and Dr. and Harold Sarta from West Vancouver.

Wedding Guests

Among those from out-of-town attending the Cameron-Harmsworth wedding were Mrs. E. Young, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Mr. and Mrs. R. Alden, Vancouver; Mrs. E. Lessard and Miss Lessard, Qualicum Beach, and Mrs. K. Cameron, mother of the bride, of Calgary.

CENTENNIAL UNITED

Centennial United Church Women will meet Wednesday, May 9 at 2 p.m. in the Howard Harris Building. Topic for panel discussion is "Citizenship that Counts."

Wendy Burbridge Bride Of Kenneth G. Evans

Apple blossom and white lilac decorated St. Matthias Church last night when Wendy Diane, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Burbridge and granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hartley, exchanged nuptial vows with Kenneth Gordon, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Evans.

The bride's floor-length white brocade gown featured a scoop neckline and lily point sleeves. A high crystalline coronet held her bouffant veil and she carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds, stephanotis and trailing ivy.

Matron of honor, Mrs. Darlene Burbridge, bridesmaid, Miss Linda Evans wore identical frocks of mint green with accessories en tone. Their flowers were pink carnation nosegays and ivy.

The bride was given in marriage by her father at the double-ring ceremony officiated by the Rev. Angus Cameron of Lundavra. Mr. Robert Copley was best man and Mr. Brian Burbridge and Mr. Philip Trace were ushers.

Mr. T. Catterall proposed the toast at the reception held at the Golden Slipper. The bride and groom cut a three-tiered wedding cake. For her going away outfit Mrs. Evans chose a rose two-piece suit, white hat and black accessories. Following their honeymoon to Portland, Ore., and other northern states, the couple will make their home at 637 McKenzie Avenue.

The Story Opens on a Whimsical Note But the End Is Stark Tragedy

It was in England, during that fabulous summer of 1959 (for which I got all the credit, because they said I had brought the lovely weather from Canada), and I had bought a little light motorcycle on which to explore the countryside.

There were those, of course, who were of the opinion that this is not a suitable form of transportation for grandmothers, and were apprehensive, if not wholly surprised. A bus, said they, the trains, or a car might be better?

But I couldn't afford a car. I am bored and uncomfortable on trains, and bus drivers might be expected to regard with disfavor requests for stops to sketch a river, dawdle over a quaint bridge, sit down under a centuries-old oak, or confer with a passing dog. With out all of which a country outing is not, to this writer, worth the effort.

Hence the motorcycle.

It was called a Quickly, of German make, and I obtained a licence which said I could ride it. I also obtained various types of insurance, just in case the license was quite wrong.

Actually, we managed fairly well. Quickly and I, although at the beginning every trip was a leap into the unknown, which might or might not have much future. And the word leap is well advised, because the low gear was very stiff and frequently resisted all attempts on my part to get it to function, with the result that I either shot forward at embarrassing moments, as when level crossing gates were coming down, or I came to a dead stop when traffic behind me expected, quite reasonably, something entirely different.

Once, I remember, I couldn't control the weight of the thing on a down grade and very nearly bowled over a constable. He was very sweet about it, and agreed resignedly with me that, in any event, his was a life fraught with peril.

On another occasion a car crossing my bows stopped crossing and stopped cold. It was in the middle of a roundabout, and I had confidently expected that this particular car would be gone when I reached the point he had been occupying. He wasn't. With panic in my heart I nicked his tail-light, swooped round him, wove out and past a bus ahead of him, terrified a man into a flying vault for the curb, and wound up in a one-way street going the wrong way. There, too, the constable just said, "Tch, tch, tch! Tother way, love!" And showed me the route to take.

Which, incidentally, is why the police of Great Britain make more friends for law and order than do their prototypes in any other part of the world.

HOWEVER, in spite of difficulties and some rather peculiar mishaps, I did a fair job of covering the south of England from Wiltshire to Kent, and along a good part of the channel coast.

NICODEMUS LOST HIS PLAYMATES

Amongst other little towns, I stayed at Malmesbury, and it was there I became acquainted with Nicodemus and his owner. I shall never forget Nicodemus . . .

"He's quite friendly, and never bites," said the Elderly Clerical Gentleman, "so you needn't feel afraid."

The mannered border collie and I smiled indulgently at one another at the notion of assault or fear on the part of either. I scratched his soft black and white ears, and he graciously fanned his tail.

The meadows drowed under great, venerable oaks. A cuckoo spoke nearby, and beside us a small stream ran dark green at the foot of a row of sloping gardens. At one point its channel had been cunningly narrowed by ancient rocks, and here the water was swift between twin wooden slots; built to house a dam made of heavy boards, like a small door, which hung now on a post set in the bank. A sign on the door said "The Hatch." Ancient, primitive, effective.

The border collie stepped daintily down the grassy bank and drank from above the little rapids, where a backwater was deep and still. Then he came back, climbed the remains of a rocky wall, and surveyed the stretches of open country with an old air of looking for something which he yet nursed little hope of seeing. So, I thought, might a shipwrecked mariner, far off the sea lanes, search the horizon for a ship he knows is not likely to appear.

I WATCHED the dog a little curiously, and then turned to his master. I had cycled down the hill from the centre of the old abbey town, crossed a stone bridge, and been lured into the meadows by a lane with the stream beside it. The Elderly Clerical Gentleman had come walking his dog, and we had gotten into conversation.

"Is there," I asked, "a shorter route back to the High Street? I don't want that long haul up the hill again."

"This way," he replied, pointing. "It's called The King's Walk. Come Nicodemus."

The collie was obedient, but reluctant. He padded softly behind us, well-behaved and quiet, and ever and again he paused and looked behind him. I thought it strange he shouldn't be tearing about, barking at birds and snarling up field mice and squirrels, and generally wearing himself out keeping the countryside in order.

"He isn't old, is he?" I asked my companion.

"No," replied the cleric, "only five."

THE AUTHOR and Quickly at Devizes, Wilt.

We reached a narrow way, no more than five feet wide, twisting upward between high stone walls, and began to climb. This, said my guide, had been a secret "sallyport" of the middle ages, where once a heavy gate, locked at night, had guarded the hidden escapeway from a possibly beleaguered town down to the river and the open road. At once my imagination peopled it with hurrying, darkly cloaked figures that pressed themselves, hearts thudding, against dank walls and froze at the hall of a sentry. The collie turned as we paused for breath, and took a few steps back the way we had come, and then came back again and sighed resignedly and sank down at our feet.

"He doesn't like to leave the fields," I guessed. "He thinks there are rabbits, perhaps?"

The Elderly Clerical Gentleman sighed too. "He's wrong. I'm afraid. I only wish he weren't. But it's very intuitive of you to have noticed that. Shall we go on? Come, Nicodemus, there are no rabbits."

I STARTED to ask a question, but saw that my friend needed his breath for climbing. I pushed my cycle. It was hot, the way was steep, and we were all three panting when we came out, quite suddenly, upon a curve of the High Street.

"Nicodemus says he is thirsty again," I suggested, smiling.

"We are all thirsty," agreed the cleric, and paused beside latticed windows and a great oak door with a shining brass knocker. "Should we have a spot of tea?" I glanced across the road to a sign hanging from fine wrought iron. "I'd rather have an ale," I admitted. "They're open."

His thin face lit. "Well, now, so should I! And so we shall!"

We crossed the cobbles and went in. It was cool and dark and empty. We sat down and had two mugs of ale and a hefty swig of water from a blue bowl on the shining floor. "Oh, intelligent England! You may take your dog on the bus, too," Nicodemus came and dropped beside me, and I put a hand down to his handsome head. He looked up at me, and I have never before or since seen quite that expression in the eyes of an animal.

"What troubles him?" I asked. "There is something, isn't there?"

MY ACQUAINTANCE set his mug down on the polished oak and studied it.

"Yes," he said. "Poor Nicodemus. Even a dog, it would seem, may run into a phase of modern life so disturbed and unbalanced by the workings of science that his whole world is disrupted. And if humans can't understand the whys and wherefores of deliberate destruction, how shall an animal? Nicodemus is one betrayed."

I sat quite still.

"Well, I am retired, and we are alone, you see, Nicodemus and I. And for many years our greatest mutual pleasure was our fine walks. And for Nicodemus the most thrilling thing of all was the rabbits. He delighted to sit on a knoll, barking furiously, until he scared them up, and then he would give chase. He never hurt them, never touched them. He just played. He ran round them, and with them, and after them. If he caught up with them, he simply pranced about in a silly, puppyish way, barking wildly, until they got ahead again, and then off he would go once more. He ran himself ragged and had the most glorious time, and certainly the rabbits never suffered. He adored them, and there were thousands of them!"

He paused for a sip from his mug of ale.

"Thousands of them . . . and that was the trouble, apparently. The country was becoming overrun with rabbits, and evidently

ON MAY 12 the REGIMENT WILL HONOR

When Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry troop the color at Work Point Barracks on May 12 much of their gallant history will be represented by the 22 of their 38 battle honors which their regimental banner bears.

This colorful ceremony is not new to Victorians; nor is their splendid history.

Always, with the rigid color guard, march rank on rank of phantoms: grey-faced men, their khaki plastered with the mud of Flanders, of the fields of Festubert and the Valley of the Marne; big, bronzed men, battle-grimed from the beaches of Italy to the gates of Rome; young, eager men, grim in the stand that won their unit the highest American award for bravery in Korea.

Those are the regiment's ghosts. Those are the men who are remembered when the regiment pays honor to the color and the Queen.

SOLDIER'S DIARY

This is the diary of an old Victoria soldier, dated May 1, 1916:

"I am in the line, at the peak of the Ypres Salient, with A Coy., 49th (Edmonton) Bn. With the signals section, Radcliffe, teen-age Bobby Lowe and I are in a dugout in the front line, just opposite the officers' dugout.

"The day had been ominously quiet, but in late afternoon Fritz has opened up with heavy guns and mortars. The bombardment is confined to a front of not much more than 100 and A Coy. is getting most of it.

"The trench has become badly battered and casualties have been numerous. Our wire to headquarters is broken and Radcliffe has set out in an effort to find and mend the break. But we are able to keep in touch with headquarters through C Coy, back in support. Pete Livingstone (he is now living in Victoria) is on duty there.

"A trench mortar shell has burst on the parapet and three men have dropped in a heap—just outside our dugout. There's Newport, young Baldwin and a new man unknown to me. Lowe and I scrambled out of the dugout and found Baldwin and Newport are badly wounded in the head. The third man is dead—by concussion, since there's not a mark on him. He ran several steps before he dropped.

"There is no room for the two wounded men in our small dugout, so Lowe and I put them in the officers' dugout. . . . all the officers are out in the trenches with the men.

"We tried to help them all we could but Baldwin died in a few minutes. He knew he was going. He said, 'This is the end. Goodbye.' (Newport also died, but in hospital.)

"Major Palmer has told me to get an appraisal message to headquarters. The bombardment is more intense and there is a feeling it portends a raid. So it is good to see the imperturbable Bill Harris in the corner of our bay. He is sitting on the firing step nursing his Lee-Enfield.

"The colonel (the late Major-General W. A. 'Biffy' Griesbach) has told us to ditch our let-you-down Ross rifles and get Lee-Enfields, and not to be too particular about how we get them.

"Blondie Hammond tells us he's the sole survivor in his bay, so Joe Edwards goes along to help him out. (Hammond was a front line man until almost the end of the war—but he died in the big attack on Amiens on Aug. 8, 1918.)

"Now it's dusk. The bombardment has suddenly let up. The raid is on. Every man able to lift a rifle is on the firing step, many of them wounded. There is only one rifle and a few Mills bombs—to beat back the attack, for the one man who ran on the company front was knocked out in the shelling.

"The raiders are brave, determined men; and they scramble over the broken ground of no-man's-land from their own trenches only about 50 yards away. But brave as they are, they cannot stand against our fire.

"Only one man got into our trenches, an officer, and he had five bullets in his legs.

"A sergeant fell dead on the parapet killed by a bullet from Lieut. Arthur's revolver.

"The raid is over.

"They carried the German officer down to the officers' dugout where my brother Bob acted as interpreter during his questioning. His wounds were dressed, meanwhile. (Bob was killed in the Salient a few weeks later.)

"We are jubilant over our little victory. . . . with 51 killed and wounded, the price. . . . F.P.I.I.

THE COLOR and THE QUEEN

FIRST TROOPING: was in 1925 when the regiment commemorated the action at Frezenberg, where the Patricia's first distinguished themselves in bitter action against the German army's great assault on May 8, 1915.

The PPCLI had been organized in Ottawa only a few months before, at the outbreak of war in August, 1914, by the late Brigadier A. Hamilton Gault. But it comprised itself with the same courage, fought with the same élan as any regiment of guards. It was, at Frezenberg, with Gault, that the beginning of a splendid tradition was written.

The unit was named after the daughter of the Duke of Connaught, then governor-general of Canada, and was one of the first Canadian groups to arrive in England. The troops disembarked in October of 1914.

A month later they joined the 27th British Division, landed in France December 21, and led the division into the trenches during that bitter winter.

After serving with the 27th for 11 months and taking part in every major engagement, the battalion joined the Canadian Corps as a component of the 7th Canadian Infantry Brigade, 3d Canadian Division, where it remained until the end of the war.

The regiment fought with fine spirit, skill and courage, and encountered heavy action on such battlefields as Ypres, The Somme, Vimy and Mons, winning 18 battle honors.

There were 3,961 casualties, 1,271 killed in action.

After returning to Canada, the unit was disbanded in Ottawa in March, 1919.

Next month, the PPCLI was constituted as a regiment of the permanent active militia with Lady Patricia Ramsay as its Colonel-in-Chief.

The years between the two world wars were lean for the military, with defence spending at a minimum. During this period the total strength of the PPCLI sometimes was as low as 200 of all ranks.

The unit served at Fort Osborne Barracks in Winnipeg and "B" Company was sent to Work Point Barracks in November, 1920.

The PPCLI had 1,082 men wounded and 301 killed during the Second World War.

It sailed from Halifax Dec. 22,

1939, for the United Kingdom as a unit of the 2nd Canadian Infantry Brigade, 1st Canadian Division.

First encounter with the enemy was in the landing at Pachino, Sicily, on July 10, 1943.

The PPCLI participated in the Italian campaign and fought in Holland in the final battle with the Germany army.

The PPCLI participated in the Korean War, and the 2nd Battalion became the first Canadian unit ever to receive the Distinguished Unit Citation by the President of the United States, for its gallantry in operations at Kapyong on April 24 and 25, 1951.

Since its inception in 1910, the regiment has won 38 battle honors, of which 22 are now carried on the Regimental Color.

Since returning from Korea, both the 1st and 2nd Battalions have completed a tour of duty in Germany as part of Canada's NATO force.

The 1st Battalion has been stationed at Work Point in Victoria since returning from Germany in October, 1954.

They Brought in Rags to Feed B.C.'s FIRST PAPER MILL

For the Forest Pulp Process Was Unknown

By ERIC SISMEY

On July 30, 1788, Tomas de Suria sailed from Cadiz, Spain, with Malaspina, on a voyage to the northwest coast. In his journal we find mention of "... Don Pedro Alberni, Captain of Volunteers of Catalonia, governor and castellan of the new establishment and fort at Nootka ..."

There is no record of Don Pedro having visited the Inlet and it is claimed that the name Alberni was assigned by Governor James Douglas—just in time, perhaps.

In 1859 Captain Edward Stamp and Malcolm Sproat were arranging with Governor Douglas for timber limits and construction of a large sawmill for the Anderson interests. And had they not found the Inlet already named we might have had Port Anderson or some such name in place of Port Alberni. Both Sproat and Stamp have their own names scattered about. There is Sproat Narrows and Stamp Narrows on Alberni Canal; there is a Sproat Lake and a Stamp River. They are well remembered.

I like to retain native names where possible. Qualicum, derived from the Salish "Xwalaxam", is a fascinating name even if the English translation "Dry Dog Salmon" is not too attractive.

The Sessahts of Alberni will never understand why whitemen took the name "Somass" of the little creek that ran through their village and applied it to a beautiful river. Somass means "throw-away-place". The little creek was where they tossed their rubbish.

In The Islander, February 11, 1962, I wrote about the Anderson sawmill, the third steam sawmill, the largest at the time on Vancouver Island, which operated from 1861 through '64. Early in 1865 it shut down because, as Malcolm Sproat reported "... there were no more accessible logs" ... "Viewed commercially," he wrote, "though the wood is of first class quality, these forests are of little value owing to the difficulty of getting logs or spars over a rugged surface to a sawmill or a place of shipment."

But sawmilling at Alberni did not stop completely with the closing of the Anderson mill. Small mills continued to cut for immediate local use. And one such mill operated to saw timbers and lumber for a paper mill on the Somass River—the first mill in British Columbia to manufacture paper.

There is little left of this pioneer paper making venture except traces of the power dam across the Somass River in Alberni's Paper Mill Dam Park and a monument of four millstones, quarried and shaped in Aberdeen, Scotland, in front of the offices of MacMillan, Bloedel company's huge pulp and paper complex at Port Alberni.

In 1891, Henry Carmichael promoted a syndicate to manufacture paper in British Columbia. He headed the company as director. Two cousins, Alfred and Norman, were to head up the work at the mill.

The mill site was chosen about half a mile upstream from where the present highway bridge crosses the Somass. Here the river dropped about six feet and here the power dam was built.

On May 4, 1892, the barque 'Ariadne', 147 days from London, arrived at Esquimalt to unload machinery from an abandoned paper mill in Scotland.

Soon afterwards a flat bottomed steamer, 'Barbara Boscowitz', sailed from Esquimalt around Cape Beale to Port Alberni. At high tide she continued up-river to unload on a flat rock, just above the road bridge, shafting, gears, boiler, miscellaneous machinery and the four millstones which are now part of the MacMillan, Bloedel monument.

During the summer of 1892, the rusty machinery was chipped and polished; as each part was finished it was hauled by ox team to the mill site.

To aid in construction a small steamboat, 'Lily', was purchased and brought up from Victoria. The 'Lily' was used to ferry men and material to the flat rock and later to take finished paper to Port Alberni where it was loaded for export.

The mill and dam were two years in building and by the time it was ready to run a little more than $75,000 had been spent.

Paper was not made from wood pulp, as one would expect, but from rags and waste paper brought all the way from Britain or the United States, and the circular stones in the monument were used to grind rags and waste paper to pulp. There would not have been enough power to make ground-wood pulp, and besides, at that time paper was not made that way.

Wrapping paper, in square sheets, was made in much the same manner as paper was made by the Chinese 1,000 years before. Rags and waste paper, ground to a creamy slop, was poured into wooden boxes with a screened bottom through which excess water drained. The wet sheet was then dried, pressed and calendered—one sheet at a time.

Early in 1895, financial troubles occurred. Hewartson, the first manager, was replaced by Dunbar, a practical Scots paper maker, but the change came too late to save the company from bankruptcy.

Dunbar thought he could make paper from bracken and other ferns. He tried, but never succeeded.

More than 50 years elapsed between the time the wheels stopped in British Columbia's first paper mill to when steam was turned into the pulp mill of Bloedel, Stewart and Welsh Company at Port Alberni, in 1947.

Since that date, and with changes in company ownership, the history of pulp and paper manufacture in the Alberni Valley has been one of continued expansion.

MacMillan, Bloedel is adding another paper making machine to the huge Port Alberni plant. There is little doubt this new machine will make more paper every hour than the first paper mill in British Columbia made in its entire two years of operation.

They did a great deal of damage. Crops, of course. So presently a Frenchman came up with a drug ...

HE PAUSED AGAIN, and slowly shook his head. "It—it was quite dreadful. The poor creatures. They had always been so alive, so alert, rather enchanting, really. But now, one could walk right on top of them, and they were unaware of danger. They were unaware of anything. The drug robbed them of sight, of hearing, of their sense of smell. They crouched everywhere, deaf, blind and lost. Helpless. Their bodies covered the highways.

"Nicodemus, of course, couldn't even begin to understand. It was heartbreaking. He would dash up to them, and they just crouched, shivering. They ran no more. They were all about him, but they never ran. They couldn't play with him. They could only crouch—and die. And Nicodemus was stricken ... He would come running back and back again to me, whining, imploring. I could do nothing. He was doubly betrayed.

"Well, that was some years ago. But he doesn't forget. He looks for his playmates daily, but they're gone. And he remembers how they went. So now his walks have become, like his master's, sedate and uninspiring." He smiled. "Not a happy story, I'm afraid."

I drew a long breath. "Have you," I suggested inanely, "tried a ball?"

"Oh yes, we have a ball. And he very willingly trots after it and picks it up. But before returning with it he always stops and glances all about, just to make absolutely certain there are no rabbits instead. It gives him, perhaps, a little more exercise. Poor Nicodemus."

HE BENT DOWN and stroked his friend, and the dog arose. So did the cleric. And I.

"I've enjoyed this little visit," said he, and crossed to the bar with our mugs. Nicodemus turned to me as though to say goodbye, and I dropped to the floor and put my arms about him.

"I'm sorry about the bunnies," I told him softly. "Never mind. Perhaps there'll be more, some day."

Nicodemus sighed, waved his lovely plume of tail, and politely tried to look comforted, but I could see that he didn't really believe me.

RAY COLLISHAW and His Mates were Embarked Upon Vengeance Flight

Down
Richtofen's Ace

Story and Illustration
by
ED COSGROVE

On the morning of June 27, 1917, a flight of four all-black Sopwith triplanes took off from their field and winged their way toward the shell-scarred Flanders battlefields.

Ostensibly, the all-Canadian flight of No. 10 Squadron was on a normal offensive patrol behind the German lines.

Actually, they were pursuing a vendetta with a German pilot who flew an all-green Albatross biplane.

Flight Leader Ray Collishaw of Nanaimo and his three wing mates of "B" Flight, Royal Naval Air Service, had a score to settle with that German.

The previous day, the flight of all-black navy triplanes had numbered five when they met up with the entire Jagdstaffel of Baron Manfred Von Richtofen.

In the melee that followed, Richtofen and his second leading ace, Lieut. Karl Allmenroeder, flying an all-green ship, had pounced on one of the Canadian pilots and sent the triplane crashing to the ground.

Its pilot, Flt. Sub-Lieut. J. E. Nash of Hamilton, Ont., survived the crash with minor injuries.

But the men of "B" Flight didn't know their comrade was still alive in a German prison.

His loss was the first the flight had suffered since they had been transferred from the Belgian coast to the hectic Western Front to help the hard-pressed Royal Flying Corps. Between May and July, the navy flight downed 87 German planes, with only the loss of Nash to mar that record.

Collishaw was already an ace several times over when the squadron was transferred. He had distinguished himself in fights against German aircraft in raids on Zeebrugge and in flying protective cover for British fleet units operating in the North Sea.

The aircraft of the flight were orphan as far as the Royal Flying Corps was concerned. RFC pilots had rejected the triplane in favor of more conventional aircraft, thereby doing themselves a disservice, for the three-winged plane was a hot performer. Powered by a 130-h.p. Clerget, it could climb to 6,500 feet in six minutes. Top speed was 115 miles an hour and the tiny airplane was armed with twin Vickers machine-guns.

Though it resembled the Fokker triplane, the Sopwith was actually the forerunner of the German triplane which later performed so well for the Imperial German Air Force.

Since it had been rejected by the RFC, the triplane was passed along to the navy—a blessing in disguise if there ever was one.

After "Bloody April" the desperate RFC had to borrow navy squadrons to help meet the rampaging German squadrons on the Western Front.

Collishaw and his Canadians, already flying distinctive planes that made them marked men, decided to go one step further and steal a page from the German Air Force's book by painting their planes all black.

Collishaw, with 23 victories at the time, flew "Black Maria"; Flt. Sub-Lieut. Ellis Reid, Toronto, with 18 victories, flew "Black Roger"; Flt. Sub-Lieut. J. E. Sharman, Winnipeg, 11 victories, was in "Black Death"; Nash, with eight victories, was flying "Black Sheep"; and Flt. Sub-Lieut. M. Alexander, Toronto, six victories, flew "Black Prince."

Opposing German squadrons soon came to know and fear the all-black Canadian flight, which maintained RFC tradition by continually carrying the war into German territory in their offensive patrols.

Then on June 26 Nash found himself under the guns of the Red Baron and Allmenroeder, second top ace of Richtofen's Jasta II, with 30 victories to his credit.

So when the four Canadians spotted the German squadron next day, they attacked with one thought uppermost: Get the man in the green Albatross.

It fell to Collishaw, who rocketed through the German formation towards the green plane.

But it was no easy victory. Both men were accomplished aerial duelists and their manoeuvres soon carried them clear of the main battle.

Then Collishaw finally spotted an opening. At point blank range he fired a long burst into the body of the Albatross, which flipped onto its back out of control and dove into the ground.

That same day, Nash, nursing cuts and bruises, in a temporary cell, heard the tolling of a bell, and looking through the barred window, saw a group of German officers accompanying a coffin from a nearby church.

The guard, who could speak English, told him it was the funeral of Lieutenant Allmenroeder, the man who had shot him down only the day before.

To Dissipate Those Breakfast Blues

What is your rating for breakfasts? Are your breakfasts humdrum?

It is so easy to get into a breakfast rut. Most housewives, myself included, are inclined to regard breakfast as the one meal that needs no planning.

Certainly there are people who have fixed breakfast habits . . . the man who will eat what is put before him for dinner will insist on exactly the same breakfast 365 mornings a year. He wants his orange juice, two boiled eggs, three slices of toast with marmalade and two cups coffee. He doesn't want grapefruit for a change. He doesn't want his eggs fried with bacon or honey instead of marmalade . . . he just doesn't want any change. If you have that kind of a husband you are lucky; you haven't any breakfast problem. But for the indifferent breakfaster we have to expand our breakfast efforts.

Actually the person who always eats breakfast and the one who has a fixed breakfast habit are in the minority. A much larger group includes the late sleeper who never has time for breakfast, those mistaken people who think skipping breakfast is slimming and those who say they have no appetite at breakfast time. Then there's the mother who takes seriously the task of feeding a hard-working husband, growing children or the high school ath-

What's in a good breakfast? It should contain enough get-up-and-go to last the whole morning . . . fruit or fruit juice, cereal, milk, meat, fish, egg; or cheese and enriched whole grain bread or rolls.

Take time for breakfast . . . It's the cue for keeping pace with modern living. Plan breakfast menus as carefully as you do other meals. Night before preparation of food which can be stored in the refrigerator—batter for hot cakes, muffins or the dip for French Toast—will save precious minutes in the morning.

Surprise is a fine breakfast ingredient. A special treat occasionally is another way to induce breakfast skippers to eat.

Of course steak sounds extravagant but there is a way to make the less expensive cuts temptingly tender. Lean, hearty breakfast steaks—tender, juicy and flavorful, thanks to Instant Meat Tenderizer—make the perfect quick, protein-packed way to start your family's day. Especially when cooked together with luscious French toast right at the table in the waffle iron.

An unconventional breakfast will not draw lightning . . . only praise. You can purchase jiffy or breakfast steaks at most meat markets . . . They are cheaper, boneless beef, cut thinner for fast cooking. Sprinkled with meat tenderizer they make a luxury breakfast without straining the budget.

Today we are going to concern ourselves with tempting the appetites of breakfast spurners.

BREAKFAST is the meal that furnishes a new supply of pep and energy after long overnight fasting. Breakfast should be everybody's meal . . . One should eat a fair share of the day's food needs before moving into high gear.

"JUST A SECOND"

"Of course it doesn't snap, crackle and pop you great idiot. It's porridge."

In case you are not familiar with this magic that goes by the name of Instant Meat Tenderizer I can tell you that it is a vegetable enzyme made from the tropical papaya. It breaks down tough fibres and tenderizes meat.

TENDERIZED BREAKFAST STEAK AND FRENCH TOAST

To serve four . . . Four steaks and Meat Tenderizer. Four eggs, one teaspoon salt, one tablespoon sugar, three-quarters to one cup milk and eight slices bread (two days old). Thoroughly moisten the meat with water. Pat the water on with a brush or your fingers on both sides. Sprinkle the tenderizer like salt over the entire surface of the meat. But use no salt! To insure penetration, pierce the meat deeply with a kitchen fork at half-inch intervals. The meat is ready to cook immediately.

Preheat the waffle iron, electric frying pan or ordinary skillet to highest temperature. In a shallow dish beat eggs slightly, add salt, sugar and milk. Soak bread in egg-milk mixture. Place two slices of softened bread in well-seasoned waffle iron. Brush steaks with oil and place in other half of waffle iron. Cook about two-and-a-half minutes. Repeat for two additional servings.

Serve one steak and one slice of toast on heated plate. Allow the four extra slices of bread to cook for second servings. Top seconds with butter and choice of syrup, honey or jam. Don't tell me there will be any breakfast skippers for this meal.

A starter could be a half grapefruit with a bright red maraschino cherry garnish. And a beverage, of course.

IN TUNE WITH THE TIMES you can create your own "Instant" frozen French toast. At a more leisurely hour than breakfast take time to prepare French toast as usual . . . coating slices of enriched white bread in an egg-milk dip. The dipped uncooked "toast" is layered with aluminum foil between the slices, overwrapped in packages of four, and frozen. When ready for breakfast some busy morning, the foil layers make for easy separation of the frozen bread slices. Simply pop them into a hot skillet with melted shortening, brown until golden and crisp, and presto! The breakfast main course is ready!

"A change is as good as a rest," they say. And it's a sure cure for Ginnie Beardsley finds delight:

ON BEING PAINTED, She Kept Her Head and Soul

"Let's face it: I'm too ripe to be cheesecake and too young to be a really interesting old bat," I said when my husband announced that he wanted Peggy Walton Packard to paint my portrait.

"Sitting" for a painter wasn't exactly new to me. I think I must have been four or five when an artist first decided that I was an "interesting" child. Translated, this meant that I was a skinny, awkward kid with striped, straight hair, a turned-up nose, and a distinct preference for adult company. So, I was dressed in my best navy blue taffeta and told to sit in a big chair, and "please, try to keep still." Ha! I wriggled and squirmed and fidgeted, wrinkled my nose and screwed up my eyes, chewed my nails and wound my legs around the chair rungs. Finally the poor painter threw down his brushes in despair. What happened to him I don't know. I shouldn't even blame him if he went abstract.

My next brush with the arts came about when a group of us from the rather experimental elementary school I attended were taken to be exposed to culture in the form of an exhibition by the late Albert Herter, father of former Secretary of State Christian Herter. We kids inched our way around the gallery (the only picture I can remember was one of a strikingly handsome young man posed as Apollo). After we had been herded out, the artist nodded in my direction and remarked, "You brought one I'd like to paint." The teacher, passing on word of what might have been considered to be a commendable performance, said that there were "children and children, but only one Ginnie Lee" — which was perhaps as well. I don't recall what the great man's fees were, but I gathered from subsequent family conversation that he would have done better to cast his artistic eye on one of the four daughters of a munitions magnate who were among my school mates. So nothing came of that either.

I was in my late teens when a pretty little girl who was considered to have talent decided to practice on me for want of something better to do at a resort where they closed the tennis court and drained the swimming pool on Sundays. The resultant candy box profile, with my features and the painter's own sweet expression, is still kept. I think, by my family.

Time passed. As a young married woman whose husband was on the road much of the time, I fell in with a group of painters or the convenience and saving of sharing the cost of a model while I tried my hand at sculpture.

One thing about models in a community where art isn't a steady business: they frequently don't turn up. Painters can always turn to a still life or flower group when this happens. A sculptor can't do a thing. So for the next few years I was by turns a Greek goddess, a Norwegian war victim, a pig-tailed mid-European peasant — practically everybody except Madam Butterfly. Being a thorough-going ham, I wore scarves and ski clothes, dirndls and satins — and loved every minute of it.

It's fun to watch what people do to your face. Some draw with bold, sure strokes; some squiggle. In my case there were some wildly divergent impressions; although I can't recall anyone going to the length of the little boy in the gallery full of Greek statues, who calmly turned his back on all of them and drew a four-motored bomber.

The gift for capturing likeness is a strange thing — a talent which exists in one artist and may be entirely absent in another of otherwise equal ability. I have seen a 16-year-old boy catch my face so successfully it almost made me gasp — and seen a fine teacher of 40 years' experience ruin the resemblance by adding a single stroke.

Because everyone sees something slightly different in a subject (I'm speaking now of sincere art, not of advertising stunts), families must drive an artist nearly wild at times. I was concerned about my husband, who but for a quirk of fate might have been a painter himself. Fortunately he was so impressed he kept practically quiet.

As the portrait grew in shape, color and expression, I reflected on the primitive superstition that having a likeness made of yourself is somehow going to steal your soul. I must confess I've never been greatly concerned about my spirit, but my spirits certainly got a lift from what Mrs. Packard did with my face. If she took away my soul for a while, she surely returned it in glowing condition. How did she do it? I don't know. I didn't even have to sit particularly still (I asked her about wiggly children, and she said she had never had to give up on one yet. Some families return to her with several succeeding children, so that every member of the family may be portrayed at a particularly appealing age.)

I sat on a kitchen chair perched atop a low table, ribbbed occasionally at a glass of cider. After one slight brush with a subject on which we held strong and similar opinions, I switched off because I knew from experience what it would do to my expression. We chatted of pleasant things: of Peggy's work as painter, sculptor, singer, and teacher of all three; of my present ventures. We joked a little about keeping my chin up. And presently, there I was, looking the way I do when I've just received a pat on the back or a bigger than expected cheque from an editor and all's right with the world. I could hardly believe it!

lagging morning appetites. Breakfast blues can be dispelled by variety. If your family doesn't want the same thing every morning, do change the pattern. . . . Vary the fruit or juice, choose a new kind of bread for toast, or shift to rolls or muffins.

Change the texture of your cooked cereal by adding chopped prunes, dates or raisins.

Give an egg a break by serving it scrambled instead of poached or fried.

Add a few mushrooms or grated cheese to the scramble.

Try a plain ham sandwich dipped in egg and milk and fried like French toast.

Cook wieners or hamburgers if the children like them. Both are good proteins.

Breakfast time is toast time, but don't get in a toast rut. Choose new kinds of bread for toast. . . . a nutty cracked wheat loaf, a plump potato loaf, savory rye or a mealy malt loaf. Use fruit or raisin bread for toast. All these will produce crisp tasty toast that is just a little different.

Make the breakfast table attractive with a gay cloth and bright flowers. If your garden can't supply them get a little artificial bouquet especially for the breakfast table. A basket of fruit makes a fine centerpiece; or use a bowl of colorful fruit salad.

Say good morning with an interesting breakfast.

Nature Took Twelve Centuries to Grow the Hoary Giants But Two

KINGS of the FOREST are

It was in the days when the Jutes, Angles and Saxons, after a century of intermittent raids, began their conquest of Britain—and even earlier—that some of the great Douglas fir trees of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia first felt the rain and reached towards the sun.

Few of these great trees are still standing. Some in our own day have been cut for lumber. Some have blown down. Others, through butt rot, have fallen.

It was about A.D. 693 that one seedling Douglas fir, a thriving seedling, sprouted in a favorable location in a sheltered valley near Cowichan Lake on Vancouver Island. A release from the B.C. Forest Service, July 10, 1959, said:

"Hidden in the rain forests of Vancouver Island for over 12 centuries, a giant Douglas Fir succumbed to the rip of powersaw teeth in less than an hour.

"Of record girth almost anywhere but in this province, this giant was felled on June 26, 1959, by John Weston and Jack Miller of B.C. Forest Products Ltd., Cayuse Creek Operation, near Cowichan Lake.

"The third on the list of big trees found so far in British Columbia, and to be known as 'The Cayuse Fir,' this survivor of wind, fire and weather is 1266 years old. Several centuries ago, wind severed its top, but it lived by adapting two branches which turned upward to become twin crowns, now tree size themselves."

The botanical name for the Douglas fir is Pseudotsuga menziesii. Quoting from "Douglas of the Fir," a biography of David Douglas, botanist, by Athelstan George Harvey: "With Captain Menzies, surgeon naturalist. On both voyages Menzies collected plants and cuttings which he took home for English herbaria. Among his discoveries were the salal, the large leaved maple, the arbutus, the spruce, named after him, and the fir named after Douglas."

The tree which Douglas encountered so often in northwest America and knew as Pinus taxifolia had been illustrated and described in Lambert's great work on the genus Pinus taxifolia or Nootka fir. He was not able to give a description of the cones because he had none. Douglas now supplied him with specimens that had cones. This enabled him to complete his descriptions and plates for a later edition of the book. Pinus Douglasii was the name adopted, whence we have the Douglas fir.

Again from the B.C. Forest Service: "Almost two feet thicker than the Cayuse fir, was a tree of the same species which fell at Westholme, Vancouver Island, November 29, 1913. It was estimated to be 1,500 years old and at 15 feet above ground level measured 13 feet eight inches through. At 180 feet above ground level its six-foot diameter dwarfed many normal stumps.

"The top of the tree had broken off at some unknown previous date. The tree stood at the side of the road at Westholme, opposite the farm of Alfred J. Richards.

"Details of this specimen were secured on March 5, 1934, from J. G. Pinson, of Crofton Road and the Old Island Highway. Mr. Pinson witnessed the tree falling, the result of butt rot, about 11 a.m., Nov. 29, 1913. The birth of this tree antedated the invasion of England by William the Conqueror by 633 years.

"At Great Central Lake, Alberni Valley, Vancouver Island, a Douglas fir was felled. It was 225 feet high, 109 inches in diameter on stump. It scaled 43,000 feet, board measure. Butt log, 24 feet long, weighed 25 tons. Second log was 26 feet long and 80 inches in diameter at small end.

"Adjoining the paved Island Highway in MacMillan Park, 12 miles east of Port Alberni, are some fine specimens of Douglas fir. One tree is 112 inches in diameter, merchantable height 200 feet; merchantable volume 17,600 feet, board measure.

THE LYNN VALLEY FIR

"King of huge trees so far reported in B.C. is the Lynn Valley fir, felled in 1895, by George Cary of Seymour Valley. A monster growth, 417 feet high, it had no limbs for the first 300 feet of its record height and measured 25 feet across its stump. Still nine feet wide 207 feet up, its protective bark was 16 inches thick," says a Forest Service report.

In a reply to a letter of inquiry I addressed to Major J. S. Matthews, city archivist in Vancouver, as to the validity of the "Cary tree," I received a letter dated Sept. 17, 1959 (which I am permitted to quote) in which Major Matthews writes:

"I have never been able to discover how the Cary legend came to be. It has been copied in innumerable journals and they have even sold picture postcards of it. Evidence is very strong that it was a hoax. The Club upon their of Washington a they had a conversation decided to their American photograph prepared. "I think it was perpetrated in far and wide persists."

that it was a hoax, perpetrated by the Hoo Hoo Club upon their own members from the States of Washington and Oregon. From what I gather they had a convention here and Vancouver members decided to take the wind out of the sails of their American associates, so had a fictitious photograph prepared.

"I think it was the most successful hoax ever perpetrated in Vancouver because it has gone far and wide and after about 40 years, still persists."

Major Matthews further writes that George Cary stated to him personally on March 1, 1932:

"I know nothing about any big tree, 77 feet in circumference which I am supposed to have felled near Vancouver in August 1885, and which has been published in lumber journals and made a boast of. I am prepared to assert that no such tree, 25 feet in diameter ever grew in the Lynn Valley or anywhere else in B.C."

It will be noted that in the release by B.C. Forest Service, the Lynn Valley fir was said to have been cut down by George Carey, whereas the spelling of the name of the man questioned by Major Matthews is Cary.

At the date of writing this article, I have just heard that the stump of "the largest tree in Lynn Valley" is still standing. This may possibly be the remains of the Cary or Carey tree.

At the provincial archives, I inspected the cover illustrations of the Canadian Forestry Magazine of October, 1922, also the B.C. Annual of Western Lumbermen for 1922, and would classify the tree shown as the Carey tree to be a Redwood (Sequoia sempervirens).

In the state of Washington there have been, and are, many big Douglas fir trees. R. W. Cowlin, director of the Pacific Northwest Forest and Range Experiment Station, Portland, Oregon, in a letter addressed to Henry P. Jukes of Bellingham, dated September 15, 1958, writes:

"Complications arise in obtaining data for record-sized trees. Diameter measurements for trees with swelled butts, such as is common with Sitka spruce and western red cedar, may be questioned if taken at the standard 4 1/2 feet above ground. Heights are hard to measure for many contenders because tops are often broken off of old trees. Bearing these things in mind, then, here are the current champions:

"DOUGLAS FIR (diameter at 4 1/2 feet above ground) is 16 feet nine inches, height 221 feet. Olympic National Park.

"The tree at Mineral, Washington (it blew over in 1929) had a diameter breast high of 15 feet five inches and measured 225 feet to the broken top. Judging from its diameter at the break, it was estimated to have reached about 330 feet five inches. We have no records of a 365-foot tree, although there have been rumors of some trees reaching 400 feet in Washington. We doubt this.

"SITKA SPRUCE. Mr. Cowlin gives the size of a 'record Sitka spruce,' diameter breast high, 16 feet four inches, height 180 feet. How Ranger Station, Olympic National Park. This tree has a record diameter, but there are many trees along the coasts of Oregon and Washington exceeding 250 feet in height.

"WESTERN HEMLOCK. Diameter breast high, eight feet six inches, height 125 feet. Olympic National Forest. The top must have been broken out of this tree. A 187-foot high hemlock has been authenticated near South Bend, Washington and Canadian Forest Products, Ltd., reports one 246 feet high in British Columbia."

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLAND SPRUCE

Quoting from "Forestry Newsletter" of August 1958: "A spruce felled this spring in the Queen Charlotte Islands by Northern Pulpwood Division of Crown Zellerbach, Canada, contained enough lumber to build five averaged-sized houses. Fourteen feet across at the butt, this giant is believed to be the largest handled in Canada for many years in terms of lumber content. It scaled 51,004 board feet and was bucked into six huge logs each 24 feet eight inches long. While this spruce up to just under 150 feet, Sandpitt superintendent Gordon Naylor said the top of the tree had been blown off sometime within the past 50 years or so. Logging manager Archie Rafter estimated that the tree was probably 258-275 feet high originally."

It was in the winter of 1908-1907, that in company with the late Alfred Woodcroft, the writer cruised the timber on the lands facing Skidegate Inlet and also Skidegate Chuck or Moresby Island and on the banks of Copper River, on the Queen

Charlotte Islands. We saw many enormous Sitka spruce. It would not surprise the writer to hear that the tree described above came from the Copper River country.

On the southwest slope of Waterloo Mountain, the Shawnigan Logging Division discovered a 1,300-year-old Douglas fir, the last survivor of an ancient forest that somehow by accident of terrain, slope, water drainage, and direction of prevailing wind, had come safely through the windstorms and lightning fires of centuries.

Three hundred years ago, forest fires caused by lightning, burnt over two million acres of forest lands on Vancouver Island. The 1,300-year-old Douglas fir started life as a seedling about 650 A.D. It is believed to be the oldest living tree of its kind in Canada. The area is now set aside to remain in its natural state, dated Oct. 4, 1957, by MacMillan & Borden Ltd.

(The above facts were copied from the November-December, 1958, issue of Foreman News—issued by MacMillan & Borden Ltd., Vancouver, British Columbia.)

Blueberries, Huckleberries, Azaleas or Labrador Tea

BIG HAPPY FAMILY IN HEATHER MIXTURE

Our native heathers are such an interesting, and colorful, group of plants that it is surprising more has not been written about them. One finds very few references to them in literature. They are mentioned in J. K. Henry's "Flora" of 1915, and in a few occasional papers.

"Beyond that," says Dr. Adam Szczawinski, provincial botanist, whose new and up-to-date handbook, "The Heather Family of B.C.," has recently been published, "there has been no general treatment of our native heathers.

"There are about 2,000 members belonging to this family, of which more than 60 are native to our province. None of them is a true heather or heath. We call them all heather for the simple reason they belong to the same family. This might be confusing to the layman but, botanically, it is correct. Some of these plants are very much like heather or heath."

The term "true heather" applies to the European plant Calluna vulgaris, and is known here, as well as in the United States, as "Scotch Heather." It is a low, thickly branched, evergreen shrub with flowers arranged in terminal, spike-like racemes—like those in lily of the valley.

The name "calluna" comes from the Greek word kallunem, which means "to sweep" since brooms were once made from its twigs. Even today, in Scotland, someone's untidy hairdo is referred to colloquially as "heather besom."

Cultivated in many parts of British Columbia for its beauty, charm, and sentiment—Scottish people still cling to the delightful myth that white heather brings good luck. It is now spreading, independent of cultivation, in localities where the winters are mild, and soil conditions sufficiently acid to encourage it.

One of the main purposes of Dr. Szczawinski's handbook, which includes distribution maps of each species, and illustrations, is to bring together all available data concerning the heathers of B.C. so that plant lovers, students and field workers in natural science will have a ready means of identifying them when they see them. Many of us come across them more often than we realize because few, other than botanists, are familiar with them.

The heather family's members are not all woody shrubs, or low-groundcover material. Some are broad-leaved evergreens, others deciduous, and a number of our most spectacular flowering shrubs are related.

For instance, the rhododendron, which varies in size from dwarf shrublets to small trees, is a member of the family. Its beautiful, showy blossoms and foliage are familiar to us all.

The lovely azalea, a deciduous form of rhododendron, which flowers profusely in spring and summer, acknowledges relationship. And the arbutus tree, probably the most decorative and striking of any species of flora, is a member of the family—and the only one in tree form in Canada.

One of the first things to be pointed out to me, when I moved to Vancouver Island years ago, was a twisted, old arbutus tree. I was told then, that, "the arbutus is native to British Columbia."

Although limited to a small area in B.C., the arbutus is easily recognized by its shiny, dark green leaves, which remain green all winter, and its bright, cinnamon-red bark which flakes off each summer to reveal varying blends of brown beneath. Clusters of small, white flowers are followed by bunches of orange-red berries, food for birds in winter, and often used as Christmas decorations.

According to Dr. Szczawinski, "There is no tree on this continent which equals the arbutus in beauty and it is the only broad-leaved evergreen tree in Canada."

One very unusual member of the family, which leans to the practical side rather than the beautiful, is that called Labrador tea. It is an erect, sturdy little shrub, easily distinguished by its leaves, which are dark green above, and densely covered with light, or dark brown wool beneath. Short, white umbrella-like clusters of flowers appear on the end of the twigs, and it has a strong, aromatic fragrance.

It grows so profusely in bogs and marshes that it sometimes forms communities of its own, and it is so widely spread that there are few of us who are unfamiliar with it.

Labrador tea is interesting because, through the centuries, it has been put to many practical uses. In the early days, before insecticides and rodent exterminators were known, farmers used Labrador tea to lay among the corn in their barns to drive away mice. Housewives kept it in bedrooms, and closets, to discourage flies and moths. And this common and practical little shrub, possessed of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde personality, was often used for what its name suggests: Tea! At the present time, Eskimos, Ainu and other inhabitants of the Arctic drink Labrador tea.

Having tasted the brew, Dr.

Szczawinski is not sure that he likes it in place of conventional tea. Still, "in case of emergency, or occasionally, for a change, it would be pleasant to drink with a few drops of lemon added. It tastes a little like green tea."

The spooky member of this family is that known as Indian pipe, sometimes called corpse plant, ghost plant, or ice plant. Generally found in the vicinity of rotting coniferous trees, this plant is utterly lacking in green color and lives somewhat like a fungi on organic material. Its flowers are waxy white or pink and if you came across it against a patch of green, you would probably be reminded of candies on a witch's birthday cake.

A number of species in the family supply us with fruit such as blueberries, huckleberries, bilberries and cranberries. There are as many as 11 kinds of blueberries and huckleberries in B.C., some of them delicious fruit.

I learned that the mountain cranberries, with dark red, rather acid berries, are edible when cooked, and widely used, especially in Europe. They are used to some extent in Eastern Canada, in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec.

In the Scandinavian countries, the berries are gathered in large quantities, placed in barrels, filled with water, and shipped to world markets, including New York, where they are put to use as a substitute for cranberries. Many food experts consider them superior to the true cranberry.

Other members of the family which we recognize on the spot under their common names, but seldom think of them as heather, are laurel, wintergreen, and the robust evergreen salal which is widely used by florists. These, and many others, are listed in the new handbook under their proper Latin names, as well as their common names.

"In speaking of plants," Dr.

But the Legislators
Made Brave Beginning

When, on May 6, 1862, Attorney-General George Hunter Cary defended the government's plans to borrow £20,000 for the construction of roads in Victoria's environs and the lower island, Dr. J. S. Helmcken called for caution in the Legislative Assembly.

Dr. Helmcken was not opposed to a road program, as The Daily British Colonist reported, but he was concerned over the ability of the government to meet its obligations in debentures without any adequate tax structure.

Revenues from land sales, which provided a major portion of the colonial budget, were falling and would disappear entirely within a few years, Dr. Helmcken warned. A Stamp Act, which the attorney-general now proposed, he did not consider sufficient guarantee of government solvency.

Everyone admitted, of course, the urgent necessity for roads, and the even greater need for an improved mail and express service to the supper country. Hundreds of miners in the Cariboo were paying $5 for a single letter's delivery and $4 for a newspaper.

This latter fact, in particular, liked Amor de Cosmos, founder-editor of The Daily British Colonist.

But Attorney-General Cary defended the plan to borrow for roads in this fashion: farmers were actually leaving the land on southern Vancouver Island because they were unable to get their produce to the Victoria market except by boat. And this was a precarious business when perishables were being handled without refrigeration.

Moreover, Mr. Cary thought, roads would bring new settlers.

CENTENARY FLASHBACKS

By John Shaw, Editor, The Islander

DR. J. S. HELMCKEN
... he had doubts

He found a supporter in Dr. William Fraser Tolmie.

There would be no advance in the country without roads, he argued, and the greater the growth in population the higher would be the revenue.

"I agree," said Dr. Helmcken. "I am not opposed to such a loan. I am only asking the honorable the attorney-general where the money is coming from to pay the interest."

Has the colony reached the limit of its population? he was asked.

"Not at all," replied the doctor. "But as the population increases the necessities of the colony will increase in like proportion."

As for the farmers who were quitting the land, they had not taken this desperate step because they lacked roads but because the bitter winter had destroyed their stock and left them helpless.

Moreover, the member argued stoutly, as long as Victoria was a free port farmers from the American side were going to be able to undersell the colony's producers.

Attorney-General Cary brushed aside this argument. The Stamp Act, he said, would provide the additional revenue needed to meet the interest on the road loan.

What would it cost to borrow this money? Dr. Helmcken asked. He would set a limit of 8 per cent of interest rate.

"It had better be 10 per cent," J. J. Southgate advised.

The attorney-general doubted if the money could be raised at a rate of less than 11 or 12 per cent.

The way of the roadbuilder in B.C. has never been easy. But 100 years ago the government was making a courageous beginning, even though, as Dr. Helmcken suggested, "it was mortgaging its soul."

CONDITIONS OF TRAVEL

were bad everywhere. The trails into the Cariboo gold fields were rough and the winter—particularly severe—had caused much damage. The spring thaw had pretty well obliterated the way in many places.

It was with a view to finding a solution of this problem of transport that the two-humped camels were imported and shipped to New Westminster from Victoria on May 6. There were 22 of the animals, which were to find their way to Lillooet and there pick up their first 600-pound loads for the Cariboo.

The Daily British Colonist was optimistic. These were trained pack animals and had served their masters well. They were known for their adaptability. They should be able to face the rigors of the British Columbia winter and of the Cariboo trail.

Mr. de Cosmos was wrong. The camels were a failure. They drove the horses off the roads, wherever they travelled. And such was the outcry against them, their owners reluctantly abandoned them.

However, The Daily British Colonist was correct on one score: these animals could survive the winters.

Long after they had ceased to carry freight to the mines camels were reported to have been seen in the upper country. But set free to fend for themselves they could not survive in their environment. They were as easy prey to wolves.

For the Future She Shapes Key

It would probably be quite impossible to find anyone who has learned English history—at any rate, in the British Isles—who has not heard of Guy Fawkes.

He was the gentleman who was all prepared—with three dozen barrels of gunpowder—to blow up the House of Lords on Nov. 5, 1605. Had he been successful, he would doubtless have scattered peers of the realm all over Westminster.

But he wasn't successful. Not altogether. Not quite in the way he intended.

He did achieve enormous repute. Where Nov. 5 became a day named after him and where the order of that day, like Halloween in these parts, was to mark the occasion by letting off fireworks, by lighting enormous bonfires and, oftentimes, by burning poor old Guy Fawkes in a thousand effigies all over the country.

He fancied himself a hero in a cause; he turned out to be a celebrated villain.

For himself, after 31 Nov. 50 away from England, the day has been becoming increasingly unimportant.

That is, until quite recently when I discovered that Miss Judy Roberts was born on Guy Fawkes Day; not, be it said at once, within sound of Bow Bells, but at Sidney, B.C., and quite unheralded by pyrotechnic displays or public jubilation.

It is not, of course, that Judy has it in mind to blow anybody up. Her interests are in the arts, particularly music, and any glory that she may reflect on unhappy, neglected Nov. 5 will proceed from her artistry rather than gunpowder.

Judy attended elementary school in Sidney and, when the family moved to Victoria, went on to Central Junior and Victoria High Schools. Now 17 years old, she graduates this year.

At Victoria High she is a member of the Calamity Players, the Theatricals, two (anyway) choirs and, as fine arts representative, of the Executive Council.

She started serious training in singing three years ago with Roberto Wood. Her record at the music festivals is impressive.

In 1960 she scored a third and a first, another first in 1961, and two firsts, a second and two thirds in 1962. In 1961 she was never far off the pace.

Her perennial success has been in the folk song class, and these she likes.

"For folk songs," she says, "you have to have a pleasing voice; not necessarily a technically good one."

She also feels that "you can put more of your personality into folk songs" and, says she, "in singing personality is practically everything."

And Judy plays either the auto harp or the zither to accompany herself in folk singing.

She wisely studied drama for two years and was responsible for the production number "Christmas in the South Pacific" at Victoria High School's Fine Arts Festival last December.

Miss Roberts is going to attend Victoria College for at least a year and achieve senior matriculation. But at present she confesses she has "no shining career in mind."

It seems, for the matter of that, unlikely that Guy Fawkes had any idea of how he would eventually turn out when he was Judy's age.

But look where he got to!

Victoria Was No Safe Place to Go Abroad

It is nothing new for Victoria to be embroiled in controversy about the names of its streets, and the state of its streets. From its very beginnings there has been such argument. They still rage, and, periodically, I suppose they always will.

As long ago as 1858 citizens were complaining, with much bitterness, that they could not find their way about, so mixed up were the names of the streets. Worse, it was positively dangerous to wander abroad at night, so dark were the streets, and one could fall into mudholes without the least warning.

In those far-off days, prisoners — called the chain-gang — would start work on a street, and then go off to some other job, leaving the original in mad disarray. Once the chain-gang was hauled off to Government House to build a croquet ground, leaving piles of mud on Government Street. Yes, there was a fine hullabaloo about that.

We have made a little progress since; we no longer use prisoners for street work. It was a public spectacle in the old days. People would gather on the corners to watch the chain-gang clanking by, and now and then the poor fellows were even jeered at.

We may not have chain-gangs these days, but streets are still torn up for repairs, and left in disarray for months. All last winter Rockland Avenue, between Moss Street and Government House, was torn up. Well and good. Work was going on. But one day the work was finished, and ever since that section has been like a mountain trail.

Surveyor-general Joseph Despard Pemberton laid out Victoria's first streets, and gave them names.

The Victoria Gazette, in September of 1858, announced: "Names of streets — a new map of the town of Victoria has just been compiled by the surveyor-general. On this map names to all streets are given."

"It will be observed that the names selected may be classified as follows: First, those named in honor of the three governors of the Island — Quadra, Blanshard and Douglas. Second, those named in compliment to distinguished navigators on the coast, Vancouver and Cook, etc. Third, those named after the first ships that visited our waters — Discovery, Herald, Cormorant, Pandora. Fourth, those in honor of the Arctic adventurers — Franklin, Kane, Belot and Rae. Fifth, those named after Canadian cities, rivers and lakes in North America — Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa, Toronto, St. Lawrence, Michigan, Superior and Ontario."

For some reason not clear today the streets in compliment to the Arctic adventurers had their names changed. Ottawa Street, too, has long since disappeared. Presumably it was in James Bay.

I would say that Pemberton did a very good job, showing much imagination and appreciation of history. But now Oak Bay Municipality would wipe out Victoria's Pandora Avenue, and call it Oak Bay Avenue, clear through to City Hall.

By 1858 the name-changers were already at work. The Gazette said: "The names of some streets have been changed, such, for instance, as the Kanaka Road, which now bears the name of the great mariner and traveler, Humboldt."

Page 13—The Daily Colonist, Monday, May 6, 1962

DOUGLAS STREET, between Yates and Pandora, was a sea of mud — there were no street lights — the wooden sidewalks were death traps — wise folk stayed home after dark.

I like Humboldt well enough, but I wish we still had a Kanaka Road.

Here's something I had not known before: "Vancouver Street is removed three blocks back, and the avenue heretofore bearing the name of that adventurous sailor is now called Douglas Street. Broad Street — the narrow street between Government and Douglas, is now dubbed Broadway. The titles Prince William Street and Queen's Avenue are dropped entirely."

Well, somewhere during the years, Queen's Avenue managed to get back, and for that I am glad.

Despite Pemberton's good work, the townsfolk were still bewildered, always getting lost, always complaining. The Colonist wailed: "It is almost impossible for anyone to get anything like a correct idea of the town and the location of the streets without a copy of the map before him, as few, or none of the streets are perfectly straight, and some of them run towards divers points on the compass."

That's still true, 104 years later. We may travel east on Richardson Street, cross into Oak Bay, at the Foul Bay Road border, and suddenly Richardson becomes McNeill. Cross the Junction and Pandora becomes Oak Bay Avenue. Travelling east on Fort Street, without any warning, we find ourselves on the Cadboro Bay Road.

EVEN AFTER the street cars came, and a new City Hall was up, the Yates-Douglas intersection seems to have had no street lights. The Clarence Hotel had followed smart cities, had taken down verandas, put up awnings.

After Dark . . . Says J. K. NESBITT

ALL SORTS OF DANGERS LURKED IN CITY STREETS

(I like the suggestion in a Colonist editorial that Fort Street might become Cadboro Bay Road east of the Junction. Once the Cadboro Bay Road started at Cook and Fort.)

Oddball our street name mix-ups may be, but very charming, and city and municipal fathers shouldn't be monkeying around with our time-honored system of street names and street patterns.

No sooner had Pemberton, more or less, made some sense out of our streets and their names, than a hue and cry was raised about their condition. The Colonist gave a chilling account of what was always constantly happening to innocent citizens, going their lawful ways: "The streets are in a horrible condition, and almost every morning we hear of someone having 'stuck' in the mud the night previous."

"A night or two ago, an officer of one of HM ships lying at Esquimalt bogged down in Yates Street, as the corner of Wharf, and had to call for someone to come to his rescue."

And look what happened to the man who, four years later, would be our first mayor: "On Friday evening, Mr. Harris, the butcher, fell into the open drain on Wharf Street, and severely injured himself."

The Colonist put into cold and calculating words the fury of the long-suffering, inarticulate populace: "Why it is that Wharf Street—the most used of all the town's thoroughfares—has not yet been paved we cannot imagine, as it was understood when the money to improve the streets was voted that it was to be one of the first paved."

So, on down through the many years, constant argument about Victoria's streets! At

THOSE DAYS ARE GONE FOREVER . . .

In tally-ho days, when it was a Victoria custom to hire such conveyances for picnics at Goldstream and a hundred other lovely spots, the city was small and citizens knew their way about. Street names were not so important. But conditions have changed. Now, even for long-time residents, there are confusing situations. Vancouver Street, for instance, appears to end at Pandora; but go around to Caledonia, and there it is again one time all the buildings in town had wooden verandas over their fronts, extending to the curbs, if there were curbs. They were handy, keeping snow from doorways in winter, sun off bald pates in summer. It was pleasant to sit under the leaning roofs, smoking pipes and gossiping.

But, by 1888, verandas had become terribly old-fashioned—though now I see a sort of veranda roof has returned to lower Fort Street. Verandas had to go, and The Colonist led the campaign: "Pull down the verandas. If our city streets ever are to become metropolitan, the unsightly wooden verandas must be demolished. They are a nuisance and an eyesore."

Even in those long-ago days, folk in Victoria had to be copying some place else: "When the wooden structures are gone, awnings will take their place, and the effect can only be appreciated by those who have stood on a sunny afternoon on, say, Broadway in New York, Washington Street in Boston, or Market Street in San Francisco."

In 1893 Victoria was again in a flare about streets. We had so many streets of the same names the mix-ups were enraging. Someone made a survey and found there were two Douglas streets, two Park, two Frederick, two Rithet, four Bay, two Market, two Turner, two Phoenix, two Myrtle, two St. Louis, two Belleville, two Catherine, two Henry, two St. Andrew's.

The Colonist, nearly 70 years ago, sized up the street situation in Victoria, a situation that to some extent exists today: "A final and crowning glory of Victoria's streets, in point of peculiarity, is the method of changing the names at every second corner, quite possibly for the purpose of convincing the skeptical that the duplication of names did not arise through a failure of the supply."

"For example, Pioneer Street, when it crosses Quadra, becomes North Park; Gotham, Bodwell and Grant Streets form one continuous thoroughfare; Chatham and Caledonia are one and the same; and Fort Street is, in succession, known as Fort Street; Chestnut Avenue and Cadboro Bay Road. (Somewhere along the line Chestnut Avenue was taken out of Fort-Cadboro Bay, and placed at right angles to it.)

Here was the big sigh of 1893: "The study of Victoria's streets is an interesting one; why they are as they are in many particulars is past all finding out."

I say now, let's give up trying to find out why, and accept them as they are. I wish that long ago our town fathers hadn't drowned Birdcage Walk and Carr Street in Government Street. However, it's too late to go back now.

I'm thankful all those humdrum numerical street names have disappeared. Fifth, alone, remains. I think we could change that without losing anything. Perhaps we might call it Thomas Harris Street.

I would still keep Fifth Avenue in New York. Fifth belongs there, but not here!

Nuclear Bomb Expert Says:

ONLY WORLD GOVERNMENT CAN GIVE LASTING PEACE

THE LEGACY OF HIROSHIMA by Edward Teller with Allen Brown; Doubleday; $3.95.

Reviewed by DAVID GAUTHIER

This book is important. It should be read and its arguments should be weighed by every person concerned with the dangers of nuclear war, and the policies we must adopt to avert those dangers.

In saying this I do not imply that I agree with the arguments of this book. I believe many of them to be wrong — dangerously wrong. But they must be examined, and, if they are wrong, they must be refuted.

Dr. Edward Teller is one of the principal contributors to the development of nuclear weapons by the U.S. Hungarian by birth, an American citizen for 20 years, Dr. Teller is a brilliant physicist and a courageous, dogmatic and outspoken critic of many aspects of American defence policy.

His book outlines the development of the A-bomb and the H-bomb, the dangers of radioactive fallout, the course of disarmament negotiations, and the policies he considers necessary to ensure continued peace and security against communism.

The first policy is adequate passive or civil defence. Teller argues this can enable the U.S. to survive nuclear attack.

Next he urges a second-strike nuclear force "capable of immediately returning any attack made upon our nation."

To deal with limited or localized attacks on allied or neutral nations, he urges preparation for limited warfare — "limited in scope, limited in area, limited in objectives, but not limited in weapons." Teller believes that nuclear weapons must be used in limited wars.

Finally, Teller argues that "we must realize that passive and active preparedness will buy us nothing but time. We must use this time to establish a lawful and prosperous community of nations to ensure peace. Our ultimate goal can be nothing less than world government based upon the principles of freedom and democracy."

Advocates of nuclear disarmament will be surprised by Teller's view of their effectiveness. He deplores the extent of public concern over fallout, the widespread enthusiasm for what he considers unworkable disarmament proposals, and American unwillingness to use nuclear weapons against limited aggression.

But Teller is not oblivious to the moral issues involved in nuclear warfare. He says, "It was unnecessary and wrong to bomb Hiroshima without specific warning."

And he insists, "We should never have declared that we would respond to limited Soviet acts of aggression with a massive, all-out attack. Under no circumstances would we be justified in striking the first blow in an all-out war."

What of his arguments? Here I can only say that Teller is a nuclear physicist, not a military strategist, nor an arms control expert. I find his amateur enthusiasm for limited nuclear warfare less convincing than the scepticism of professionals.

Teller's fundamental assumptions also alarm me. However terrible the victory of world communism would be for those alive today, I cannot believe that it would seriously affect the condition of mankind as little as a century hence. Teller believes otherwise — "Freedom may survive . . . or freedom may be suppressed . . . Our future will be determined decisively during the last decades of the 20th century." Teller takes an apocalyptic attitude towards American-Soviet conflict which seems quite irrational.

Teller's proposals require men to act efficiently on the basis of rational self-interest. This is, perhaps, a natural requirement for a physicist to make, but a dangerously unworkable one.

We must plan to minimize the threats of nuclear war and of communism in a world in which accident, incompetence, ignorance and blind emotion determine many actions. The realization of this is the true legacy of Hiroshima.

If a Nobel Prize were ever to be awarded on a quantitative basis, the unbeatable winner would be a sturdily-built Englishman in his early fifties named John Creasey. To look at, Creasey is mild enough—blue-eyed, greying hair, a small mustache, with a friendly expression, looking more like a small-town banker than the unique person he really is—the most prolific writer published in the English language.

Do I observe eyebrows raised in doubt? John Creasey is also J. J. Marry, Anthony Morton, Gordon Ashe, Jeremy York, Robert Cain-Fraser, Michael Halliday, and half a dozen less widely-known pseudonymous persons. Under all of these by-lines he has published some 300 different hard-cover books at last count. All are mysteries and suspense stories of different types (a specific by-line is assigned to each type), and as of this writing the most recent to appear is 'Death of a Racehorse' (Scribner) under the Creasey by-line. Where this particular book ranks in the overall Creasey canon is hard to say, since it was completed a couple of years ago. Two-score more have been written since.

John Creasey . . . a Man of Many Names

FOR HIM, A NOVEL EACH TWO WEEKS!

John Creasey is, in short, a one-man writing industry. He has definite opinions on the craft of writing and is articulate in enunciating them.

"I do it all by organization," he explains patiently. "I have extremely regular work habits — so many hours every day, so many days for every book, and in the course of half a year of concentrated effort I can produce from a dozen to 15 books. The rest of the year I spend travelling or running my various business enterprises." (The most recent: two magazines in London.)

He does his writing in a small village about 80 miles southwest of London. He works in a study lined with books, about 1,000 of which are his own in various editions and translations. Nothing about writing fazes Creasey.

"Give me an idea — any idea," he said to me, "and I'll write a book-length story about it. It may not be much of a story in the first draft, but by the time I get through revising it, it will be worth your time to read. That's how I do all my books."

"Don't you," I asked, "do any preliminary working out of plots in your head?"

"No — that's a waste of time," he answered emphatically. "I just sit down in front of my typewriter and out it comes. As I told you, I work systematically. Every year I set myself a schedule of a dozen or more books, divide them up among my various by-lines according to style and subject, and then get to work on one after the other. Each takes about two weeks of effort to complete."

When I whistled in amazement Creasey laughed. "Most authors waste an incredible amount of time," he asserted. "If only they got it down on paper and started revising instead of just staring out of the window, how much more they'd get done! Time is the one gift all human beings enjoy, and it should never, never be wasted."

Creasey doesn't make this mistake. He has 19 books all finished waiting to be published, since he likes to stay two years ahead of the printer. This allows for any contingency that might prevent him from getting to his typewriter.

Wasn't he sometimes haunted by the fear that the flow might dry up some day?

"No, it never has, and I don't expect it ever will. I never start out to tell a specific story — I just let it come. Halfway through I often don't know myself who committed the crime or how it is all going to end. If I can keep up my present pace — and I see no reason why not — I should wind up with somewhere between 500 and 750 published books."

What had been his most prolific year?

"That was 1946, when I published 22 full-length books averaging 65,000 words each."

At this point I closed off the interview shakily. It had suddenly crossed my mind that the hour spent in talking to me had probably cost Creasey two chapters.

Drama in Terms of Life

O'Neill Wrote In Agony

Reviewed by JOHN BARKHAM

On the opening page of this monumental biography Arthur and Barbara Gelb quote some lines from O'Neill's play The Great God Brown, as the key to his philosophy: "Man is born broken. He lives by mending. The grace of God is glue!" This thought, which recurs in one form or another in all the principal plays, can be traced back to Strindberg's "Men are pitiable creatures."

O'Neill saw life as a tragic struggle in the classic Greek sense, a conclusion he reached not objectively but by way of his own experience. It is difficult indeed to conceive of a more subjective writer: he put something of himself into everything he wrote. From his early romantic sea dramas to the unsparing ruthlessness of the last revelations, his plays reflect (in Brooks Atkinson's phrase) a "series of obsessions" which haunted him.

The abiding virtue of this Gelb biography is that it explores these obsessions in minute detail, and thus inevitably thrown fresh light on the plays themselves. It is, indeed, difficult to savor the full meaning of the plays without knowing what their author was doing and thinking at the time he wrote them. Hereafter we will know where to go for this kind of documentation.

O'Neill is an Everest of a book, in which the authors have patiently and assiduously assembled every piece of relevant information bearing on the playwright, his family, and the influences and events which shaped his career. In recent months I have had occasion to read several books on O'Neill, but for sheer volume of fact none comes within measurable distance of this Gelb biography. What's more, much of the material is drawn from hundreds of persons who knew O'Neill. We are indebted to the Gelbs for having tapped these sources while they were still available.

Because so much of the narrative stems from interviews, letters, and similar primary sources, hardly a page is without its direct quotations.

The events in O'Neill's life being well known, these personal remembrances provide valuable background for the provenance of the plays. Nowhere else, for example, have I found so graphic an account, largely supplied by Carlotta O'Neill, of the agony her husband suffered in writing Long Day's Journey Into Night. After a morning's writing, she reported, "he would come out of his study looking gaunt, his eyes red from weeping. Sometimes he looked 10 years older than when he went in in the morning."

The pain and passion O'Neill put into his plays emerge in the performance, no matter how tortuous the language in which they are cast. You have only to see a production of even minor O'Neill to realize how it towers over the trivia which now holds Broadway in thrall. O'Neill's experimentation, his pitiless probing, his mastery of style from expressionism to naturalism—this kind of virtuosity has vanished from Broadway. George Jean Nathan put his finger on it long ago when he wrote of O'Neill: "The essential difference between O'Neill and the majority of his contemporaries lies in the circumstance that where the latter think of life in terms of drama, O'Neill thinks of drama in terms of life." This is even truer today than it was then.

The Gelbs are reporters rather than critics, but the care with which they have assembled and presented their mountain of material indicates a genuine grasp of O'Neill's character, his genius, the salient events in his life, and the vital interaction among all of them. The tone of the narrative is restrained, thus heightening the integral drama. O'Neill was one of those writers in whom experience quivered with, and cross-fertilized, the imagination, which is what this admirable biography is all about.

Shocking Quiz Scandals Provide Base for Novel

I suppose it had to come sooner or later, and here it is—a novel based on the television quiz scandals. Coast-to-Coast is a superior specimen of a peculiarly American literary genus, the Madison Avenue novel. It is smooth, glossy, high-powered and highly sophisticated. It is written in prose the verbal equivalent of a vodka martini, and its tempo is that of a supercharged sports car with the throttle open.

COAST TO COAST, by Walter Ross.
New York: Simon & Schuster. 383 pages. $4.95.

Its central character (if you can call it that) is an imaginary television network undergoing Senate investigation for rigged quiz shows. Its hero (if you can call him that) the president of the network, a slippery fellow named Christopher Frayne. When the story opens Frayne is presented riding herd on his board in the best Executive Suite tradition, dispensing guile and guile among all his veepees. He had just learned that a Senate committee is about to reopen an abortive grand jury investigation into the quiz shows, and there's no time to lose in preparing a defence.

For my part I had no trouble at all in going along with the author. His narrative carries you on like an escalator, and his expertise is so knowingly unobtrusive. Moreover, his dialogue is the purest Madison Avenue. It becomes almost a pleasure to accompany him into the darker recesses of television corruption. Though the events are imaginary, real names are artfully dropped in here and there to spread the illusion of reality.

The climax of the novel is played out in the Senate committee rooms, though there's a good deal of melodramatic hanky panky behind the scenes as well. Mr. Ross' purpose—besides wanting to tell a story—is presumably to demonstrate that venality in high places is an ugly thing, and in this it must be said he succeeds convincingly. The depth of Frayne's insincerity exceeds anything I have come across in recent fiction. At all times, whether up or down, he functions like a purring dynamo. Even in his final comeuppance he is still able to make a killing.

Coast to Coast is, however, more than a knowledgeable television novel. Clearly Mr. Ross intends to turn a bright light on an industry which concerns us all and which, in broad outline, has actually weathered a storm resembling the one depicted here. Though Frayne has no real-life counterpart (and here the reader should remind himself that he is reading fiction), there is a strong tone of irony in the words the author puts into his mouth when the network's corruption has been exposed. "Must we not also lead—even at our expense?" asks the impenitent president on the stand. "We are conscious of a larger purpose in broadcasting than making money."

At this point—for the first time in this novel—I wished I were reading fact rather than fiction. Coast to Coast may not be popular along Madison Avenue, but simple viewers like myself will relish it. —J.B.

Traffic Is the Nightmare of Growing Cities

IS MONORAIL TRAIN KEY TO THE PUZZLE?

Before the clamor and glitter of Seattle's Century 21 exposition die away, thousands of Vancouver Islanders will have ridden on the monorail train.

The idea behind the train is not simply to offer an adventure in transportation but to prove its effectiveness as a solution to the problems of the continent's rapidly growing urban areas, so frequently ensnared in their own traffic.

The two Seattle trains shuttle back and forth between downtown and the outlying fairgrounds, but on overhead beamways which do not interfere with street traffic.

Each four-car train has 124 seats and extensive standing room. Each takes less than two minutes to make a one-way trip — of more than two miles.

Downtown, passengers go to a station which spans Pine Street at the Westlake Mall. They do their ticketing there, since much of the train's operation is automatic. Then they get on moving belts, called speed ramps, which take them up to an elevated platform. From there they board a train through doors which automatically open and shut.

Passengers can move from one car to another through sliding doors, but often they sit in cushioned chairs next to large windows to view first the city, then Puget Sound, then the exposition grounds.

Their train is travelling on beamways whose average clearance is 21 feet above ground.

Arrived at the fair, they alight at a high level. For while the exposition station has a lower section, that section is used for maintenance, repair and cleaning of the trains.

Take a look at this vehicle and the structure over which it runs. Streamlined aluminum cars make up the train. The car bodies are draped over the concrete beams, three feet wide by five feet deep, which form the monorail track. The beams are supported by T-shaped concrete columns spaced at from 60 to 95 feet apart; at ground level only four feet square so that it does not interfere with traffic.

by

MURIEL MILLEN

Underneath the cars straddled over the top of the beams are dual pneumatic drive wheels. And pressing against the beam sides, to stabilize the cars, are horizontal guide wheels, also pneumatic. Each train has two sets of electric motors and control equipment which gets its current from a 600-volt rail running along the side-centre of the concrete beamway. All eight axes of each train are powered and are provided, too, with dynamic and mechanical brakes.

In order to meet emergencies, the trains have automatic safety devices, as well as supplementary solid rubber wheels designed to take over in case of deflation of the regular tires.

Seattle, of course, is not the only place interested in monorail trains. Los Angeles operates one as a tourist attraction; Europe has a few of them.

Saczawinski writes, "The botanist finds it necessary to use technical names rather than the common names of spoken language, and the

"She suffers from an impediment in her speech. She can't say No."

Interested layman soon finds that it is best for him to become familiar with botanical names, for-bidding as they seem at first sight. One can give many examples of the confusion inherent in colloquial names, without even drawing attention to the fact that all such names are useless as soon as we pass into a country in which no English is spoken . . .

"Many of our native heathers are not only important elements of beauty which form the spectacular mosaics that carpet the slopes, ridges and alpine plateaux, but are also used extensively as decorative plants in our gardens."

Compared with some, the heather family is not large, but it is well worth knowing, and studying. The new handbook, which is complete in detail and easy to follow, will serve as a welcome guide to those interested.
